HISTORY

OF

Sir CHARLES GRANDISON.

IN A

SERIES OF LETTERS.

BY MR. SAMUEL RICHARDSON,

AUTHOR OF PAMELA AND CLARISSA.

IN EIGHT VOLUMES.

VOLUME VII.

THE SEVENTH EDITION.

EDINBURGH:
Printed by WILLIAM DARLING.

M.DCC.LXXVI.

1607/5292.

Sir

Signo

Naple calle he lefthop with fente M with thin

THE

HISTORY

OF

Sir Charles Grandison, Bart.

LETTER I.

Signor JERONYMO della PORRETTA, To Sir CHARLES GRANDISON.

Bologna, Sunday, Sept. 24.

E have at last, my Grandison, somes hopes given us, that our dear Clementina will yield to our wishes.

The general, with his lady, made us a visit from Naples, on purpose to make a decisive effort, as he called it; and vowed that he would not return till he left her in a disposition to oblige us. The bishop at one time brought the patriarch to reason with her; who told her, that she ought not to think of the veil, unless her father and mother confented to her assuming it.

Mrs Beaumont was prevailed upon to favour us with her company. She declared for us: And on A 2 Thursday

Thursday last Clementina was still harder set. Her father, mother, the general, and his lady, the bishop, all came into my chamber, and sent for her. She came. Then did we all supplicate her to oblige us. The general was at first tenderly urgent: The bishop besought her: The young marchioness pressed her: My mother took her hand between both hers, and in silent tears could only sigh over it: And, lastly, my father dropt down on one knee to her—My daughter, my child, said he, oblige me. Your Jeronymo could not refrain from tears.

She fell on her knees—O my father, faid she, rise or I shall die at your feet!—Rise, my father!

Not, my dear, till you consent to oblige me.

Grant me but a little time, my father! my dear, my indulgent father!

The general thought he faw a flexibility which we had never before feen in her on this subject, and called upon her for her instant determination. Shall a father kneel in vain? faid he Shall a mother in weeping silence in vain entreat?—Now, my sister, comply—or—He sternly stopt.

Have patience with me, faid she, but till the Chevalier's next letters come: You expect them soon. Let me receive his next letter. And, putting her hand to her forehead—Rife, my father, or I die at your feet!

I thought the general pushed too hard. I begged that the next letters might be waited for.

But whatever be the contents, remember, my dearest child, that I am your father, your indulgent father; and oblige me.

Will not this paternal goodness, my dear Clementina, said the general, prevail upon you? Your father, mother, brothers, are all ready to kneel to you: Yet are we all to be slighted? And is a soreigner, an Englishman, an heretic (great and noble as is the man; a man, too, whom you have you had the r fo g

Who

you valid lemmed?

my in broth me, father faid, and pel,

by n

si her prefi fathe brot

M

her. bility the v ed y mere rable qual hear diftii thip

Her

bi-ner.

obnt :

nefs

een

ver

nee lige

ars.

er!

ear.

nich

ject,

ion.

mo-

the hem

put-

her,

beg-

her:

lear-

gent

Cle-

Your

el to

and have known

fo gloriously refused), to be preferred to us all? Who can bear the thoughts of such a preference!

And remember, my fifter, faid the bishop, that you already know his opinion. You have already had his advice, in the letters he wrote to you in the month's correspondence which passed between you before he left Italy. Think you that the Chevalier Grandison can recede from an opinion solemnly given, the circumstances not having varied?

I have not been well. It is wicked to oppose my father, my mother: I cannot argue with my brothers. I have not been well. Spare me, spare me, my lords, to the general and the bishop. My father gives me time: Don't you deny it me.

My mother, afraid of renewing her diforder, faid, Withdraw, my dear, if you chuse to do so, and compose yourself: The intention is not to compel, but to persuade you.

O madam! faid she, persuasion so strongly urged by my parents is more than compulsion.—I take the liberty you give me.

She hurried to Mrs Beaumont, and, throwing her arms about her, O madam, I have been oppressed! Oppressed by persuasion! By a kneeling father! By a weeping mother! By entreating brothers!—And this is but persuasion!——Cruel persuasion!

Mrs Beaumont then entered into argument with her. She represented to her the general's inflexibility; her father's and mother's indulgence; the wishes of her two other brothers; she pleaded your opinion given as an impartial man, not merely as a Protestant: She told her of an admirable young lady of your own country, who was qualified to make you happy; of whom she had heard several of your countrymen speak with great distinction. This last plea, as the intimate friendship between you and Mrs Beaumont is so well: known, took her attention. She would not for the world stand in the way of the Chevalier Grandison. She wished you to be happy, she said, whatever became of her. Father Marescotti strongly enforced this point, and advised her to come to some resolution before your next letters arrived, as it was not to be doubted but the contents of them would support your former opinion. The patriarch's arguments were re-urged with additional force. A day was named when she was again to be brought before her assembled friends. Mrs Beaumont applauded her for the magnanimity she had already shewn in the discharge of her duty to Heaven; and called upon her to distinguish herself equally in the silial.

A 3

Clementina took time to consider of these and other arguments; and after three hours passed in her closet, she gave the following written paper to Mrs Beaumont; which, she said, she hoped, when read in full assembly, would excuse her from attending her friends in the proposed congress.

" AM tired out, my dear Mrs Beaumont, with your kindly-meant importunities:

" With the importunities, prayers, and entreaties of my brothers.

"O my mamma, how well do you deferve even implicit obedience; from a daughter who has over-clouded your happy days! You never knew discomfort till your haples Clementina gave it you! The facrifice of my life would be a poor atonement for what I have made you fuffer.

"But who can withstand a kneeling father? Indeed my papa, ever good, ever indulgent, I dread to see you! Let me not again behold you as on Thurdfay laft.

"I have denied to myfelf, and fuch the motive that I must not, I do not repent it, the man I cfleemed. I never can be his.

" Father

. 6

c f

· F

. 1

6 t

· F

6. (

6]

. 6

4 t

4 :

6. 1

4.]

. I

6

. 1

6.

. 1

. 1

4 1

.

6. 7

4.

6.4

t for Franwhatongly me to d, as them patriin to Mrs y fhe aty to hercional

e and ed in er to when n at-

with ntrea-

even has oknew ave it poor r. ent, l ld you

motive n I e-

ather

" Father Marescotti, though he now loves the man, fuggests, that my late diforder might be a iudgment upon me for suffering my heart to be engaged by the heretic.

" I am absolutely forbidden to think of atoning for my fault by the only measure that, in my opinion, could have done it.

"You tell me, Mrs Beaumont, and all my friends i join with you, that honour, generofity, and the · esteem which I avow for the Chevalier Grandi. fon, as my friend, as my fourth brother, all join to oblige me to promote the happiness of a man · I myfelf have disappointed. And you are of opinion, that there is one particular woman of his own country, who is capable of making him happy—But do you fay that I ought to give the example?-Impossible. Honour, and the punc-' tilio of woman, will not permit me to do that!

"But thus pressed, thus dreading again to see a kneeling father, a weeping mother, and having · reason to think I may not live long, that a re-· lapse into my former malady, with the apprehensions of which father Marescotti terrifies me, may be the punishment of my disobedience [Cruel] father Marescotti, to terrify me with an affliction I fo much dread!] and that it will be a confolation to me, in my departing hour, to reflect that I have obeyed my parents, in an article on which their hearts are immoveably fixed; and still further being affured, that they will look upon my God enable me, I pray, to refign to their will. But if I cannot, shall I be still entreated, fill perfuaded ?- I hope not .- I will do my endeavour to prevail on myself to obey—But whatever be the event of my felf-contendings, Gran-relignation as a compensation for all the troubles

· I have given them for many, many months pait.

dison must give the example."

How, my Grandison, did we congratulate ourfelves, when we read this paper, faint as are the hopes it gives us!

Our whole endeavour is now to treat her with tender observance, that she may not think of receding. Nor will we ask her to see the person she knows we favour, till we can assure her that you will set her the example. And if there be a lady with whom you think you could be happy, may not this, my dear Grandison, pleaded by you, be a motive with her?

The Count of Belvedere has made overtures to us, which are too great for our acceptance, were this alliance to take place. We have been told, but not by himself, the danger to which his despair had fubjected him, in more than one vifit to you at Bologna, had you not borne with his rashness. You know him to be a man of probity, of piety. He is a zealous Catholic; and you must allow, that a religious zeal is a strengthener, a confirmer, of all the focial fanctions. He is learned; and, being a domestic man, he, contrary to the Italian custom, admires in a wife those intellectual improvements which make a woman a fit companion for her husband. You know how much the marchioness excels almost all the women of quality in Italy, in a taste for polite literature: You know the has encouraged the fame tafte in her daughter; and the count confiders her as the only woman in Italy with whom he can be happy.

As you, my Grandison, cannot now be my brother by marriage, the Count of Belvedere is the only man in the world I can wish to be so. He is of Italy. My fister, always so dear to us, and he will be ever with us, or we with them. He knows the unhappy way she has been in; and was so far from making that an objection, that when her malady was at the height (being encouraged by physicians to hope that her recovery would be the probable consequence) he would have thought himfelf

love fufinition that to f

who own hea won who can
the tha will am Cle us: you cor

COL

on will bro joi you book rel that Be ho

oure the with rein the you lady may be s to were told, spair you ness. iety. low, mer, and,

imnion marty in now nter; n in the le is id he nows o far mal by d be ught imfelf himself the happiest of men, could he have been honoured with her hand. He knows her love of you. He adores her for her motive of refusing you. He loves you, and is consident of the inviolable honour of both: Whose alliance, on all these considerations, can be so desirable to us as that with the Count of Belvedere?

Surely, my dear friend, it must be in your power to set the example: In yours, who could subdue a whole samily of zealous Catholics, and keep your own religion; and who could engage the virgin heart of one of the most delicate women in the world. What woman who has a heart to bestow; what samily, that has a daughter or sister to give, can withstand you? Religion and country of both the same?

Give us hope, therefore, my dear Grandison, that you will make the effort. Assure us, that you will not scruple, if you can succeed, to set the example; and on this assurance we will claim from Clementina the effects of the hope she has given us: And if we can prevail, will in England return you thanks for the numberless favours you have conferred upon us.

Thus earnestly, as well from inclination as in compliance with the pressing entreaties of every one of a family which I hope are still, and ever will be dear to you, do I, your Jeronymo, your brother, your friend, folicit you. Mrs Beaumont joins with us. She scruples not, she bids me tell you, to pronounce, that you and Clementina will both be more happy, fhe with the Count of Belvedere [your respective countries so distant, your religion so different], you with an English woman, than you could have been with each other. Mrs Beaumont has owned to me in private, that you often in conversation with her, even while you had hope of calling Clementina yours, lamented, for her take, as well as your own, the unhappy fituation tion with respect to religion you were both in; and that you had declared more than once to her, as indeed you did once to us, that in a beginning address you would not have compromised thus with a princess. May we not expect every thing, my Grandison, from your magnanimity? We hope it is in your power, and we doubt not your will, to contribute to our happiness. But whatever be the event, I beseech you, my dear friend, continue to love

Your JERONYMO.

LETTER II.

Lady G. To Miss BYRON.

Grosvenor-Square, Sunday, Oct. 15.

CAN I forgive your pride, your petulance?— No, Harriet; positively no! I write to scold you; and having ordered my lord to sup abroad. I shall perhaps oblige you with a long letter. We honest folks, who have not abundance of love-scoling upon our hands, find ourselves happy in a good deal of quiet leisure; and I love to chide and correct you wise ones.—Thus then I begin—

Ridiculous parade among you! I blame you all. Could he not have been Mrs Shirley's guest, if he was not to be permitted to repose under the same roof with his sovereign lady and mistress? But must you let him go to an inn?—What for! Why to shew the world he was but on a foot at present with your other humble servants, and be thought no more by the insolent Greville, and affronted as an invader of his rights. Our sex is a foolish sex. Too little or too much parade. Yet, Lord help us! were it not that we must be afraid to appear wh: pun and you life occ Dic full deli fure pra eith to t unn inte Cor cou ther

the

You
with but is pug ug
I me
An tho
of

puz

if 1

fo 1

ciou

for over-forward to the man himself, we should treat the opinion of the world with contempt.

in;

her,

nning

thus hing, hope

will.

er be tinue

7. 15.

ce ?—

fcold

ad. I

-lool-

in a

e nd

u all.

if he fame

? But

Why

ought ted as help

ppear over-

We

10.

And yet, after all, what with Lady Clementina, what with the world, and what with our own punctilio, and palpitating hearts, and fo forth, and all that, and more than all that, I own you are pretty nicely circumstanced. But, my life for yours, you will behave like a simpleton on occasion of his next address to you: And why? Did you ever know that people did not, who were full of apprehensions, who aimed at being very delicate, who were folicitous to take their meafures from the judgment of those without them: pragmatical fouls perhaps, who form their notions either on what they have read, or by the addresses to them of their own filly fellows, aukward and unmeaning, and by no means to be compared for integrity, understanding, politeness, to my brother? Confider, child, that he having feen, in different countries, perhaps a hundred women equally specious with the present mistress of his destiny, were form and outward grace to be the attractives, is therefore fitter to give than take the example.

But, Harriet, I write to charge you not to increase your own difficulties by too much parade: Your frankness of heart is a prime consideration with him. He expects not to meet with the girl, but the fensible woman, in his address to you. He is pursuing a laudable end—Don't teaze him with pug's tricks—" What, my dear Lady G. should I have done?" say you—What signifies asking me now? Did not you lay your heads together? And the wisest which ever were set on women's shoulders? But indeed I never knew consultations of any kind turn to account. It is only a parcel of people getting together, proposing doubts, and puzzling one another, and ending as they began, if not worse. Doctors differ. So many persons fo many minds.

And

And O how your petulant heart throbbed with indignation, because he came not to breakfast with you! What benefit has a polite man over an unpolite one, where the latter shall have his rusticity allowed for (O that is his way!), and when the other has expectations drawn upon him, which, if not critically answered, he is not to be forgiven! He is a prudent man: He may have overflept himfelf-might dream of Clementina. Then it was a fault in him that he staid to dine on the road-His horfes might want rest, truly !- Upon my word, Harriet, a woman in love is-a woman in love. Wife or foolish before, we are all equally foolish then: The same froward, petulant, captious babies; - I protest, we are very filly creatures all of us in these circumstances; and did not love make men as great fools as ourselves, they would hardly think us worthy of their pursuit. Yet I am so true to the Free-masonry myself, that I would think the man who should dare to fay half I have written of our Dollships, ought not to go away with his life.

My fister and I are troubled about this Greville. Inform us the moment you can, of the particulars of what passed between my brother and him; pray do. We long also to see the letter he has put into your hands from Bologna. It is on the road we hope.

Caroline and I are as much concerned for your honour, your punctilio, as you, or any of you can be. But by the account you give of my brother's address to you in presence of your grandmother and aunt, as well as from our knowledge of his politeness, neither you nor we need to trouble our heads about it: It may be all left to him. He knows so well what becomes the character of the woman whom he hopes to call his wife, that you will be sure of your dignity being preserved, if you place a confidence in him. And yet no men is so much me e me.

Hi prife would man provi and n Lagaci he fp from tunity to ma favou friend forme cation you. As his re friend Harr as your much I wan for y bowe to do with doubt would tion, fo rus very

is the

parra till fo put o

V.c

with

with

r an n the ch, if iven!

was a oad-

n my

an in jually

captiatures

love would

Yet I

hat I

y half

to go

eville.

rticu-

him;

as put road

f your y bro-

rand-vledge

rouble

. He

of the

at you

if you

is fo

much much above mere formal regards as he is. Let me enumerate instances from your letter before

His own intention, in the first place, not to furprife you by his visits, as you apprehended he would, which would have made him look like a man of felf-imagined consequence to you-His providing himfelf with accommodations at an inn, and not giving way to the invitation, even of your fagacious uncle Selby [I must rally him. Does he spare me?]—His singling you out on Friday from your men-friends, yet giving you the opporunity of your aunt's and grandmother's company, to make his personal application to you for your favour-His requesting the interest of your other friends with you, as if he prefumed not on your former acquaintance, and this after an application, not discouraged, made to your friends and you.

As to his equanimity in his first address to you: his retaining your hand, forfooth, before all your friends, and so forth; never find fault with that, Harriet. [Indeed you do make an excuse for the very freedom you blame—So lover-like!—] He is the very man that a confcious young woman. as you are, should wish to be addressed by: So much courage, yet fo much true modesty-What. I warrant, you would have had a man chalked out for you, who should have stood at a distance, bowed, fcraped, trembled; while you had nothing to do, but bridle, and make stiff courtefies to him. with your hands before you-Plagued with his doubts, and with your own diffidences; afraid he would now, and now, and now, pop out the queftion, which he had not the courage to put; and fo running on, simpering, fretting, fearing, like two parrallel lines, fide by fide, and never meeting; fill fome interposing friends, in pity to you both, put one's head pointing to the other's head, and VOL. VII. froking stroking and clapping the shoulders of each, set you at each other, as men do by other dunghill bread creatures.

You own he took no notice of your emotion when he first addressed himself to you; so gave you an opportunity to look up, which otherwise you would have wanted. Now don't you think you know a man 'creature or two, who would, on fuch an occasion, have grinned you quite out of countenance, and infulted you with their pity for being modest?-But you own, that he had emotion too, when he first opened his mind to you-What a duce would the girl have?-Orme and Fowler in your head, no doubt! The tremblings of rejected men, and the fantalies of romantic women, were to be a rule to my brother, I suppose, with your mock-majesty!—Ah, Harriet! Did I not fay that we women are very filly creatures ?-But my brother is a good man-So we must have fomething to find fault with him for .- Hah, hah, hah, hah. What do you laugh at Charlotte ?---What do I laugh at, Harriet ?- Why, at the idea of a couple of lovers, taken each with a violent ague-fit, at their first approach to each other-Hands shaking-Knees trembling-Lips quivering -Tongue faltering-Teeth chattering-I had a good mind to prefent you with an ague-dialogue between fuch a trembling couple—I, I, I, I, faysthe lover-You, you, you, fays the girl-if able to speak at all. But, Harriet, you shall have the whole on demand. Rave at me, if you will: But love, as it is called by boys and girls, shall ever be the fubject of my ridicule. Does it not lead us girls into all manner of abfurdities, inconveniencies, undutifulnefs, difgrace?---Villainous Cupidity !—It does.

To be ferious-Neither does my brother addrefs you in a stile that impeaches either his own understanding or yours .- Another fault, Hargirl! fami Cien grea need (or By fupp rict,

T

to co H State first, how himi rous

both .

ron man

can

Italy being T brot

good

him ed to he is fers. Jady the c of yo not i but other ness to co riet, is it not ?- But fure you are not fo very a

you

read

gave wife

l, on ut of

y for emoou—

and lings

wo-

pose, oid I

have

hah,

idea

olent ering

had a logue

faysrl--if

have

will:

fhall

t not inous

r ad-

riet,

The justice he does to Lady Clementina and her family [let me be very serious when I speak of Ciementina], is a glorious instance, as well of his greatness of mind as of his sincerity. He has no need to depreciate one lady, to help him to exalt (or do justice, I should rather say, to) another. By praising her, he makes noble count to you, in supposing you, as you are, one of the most generous of women. How great is his compliment to both ladies, when he calls Clementina the Miss Byron of Italy! Who, my dear, ever courted woman as my brother courts you? Indeed there can be but very sew men who have such a woman to court.

He suffers you not to ask for an account of the state of his heart from the time he knew you first, till now. He gives it to you unasked. And how glorious is that account, both to you and himself?

Let us look back upon his conduct when last in Italy, and when every step seemed to lead to his being the husband of another woman.

The recovery of Clementina, and of her noble brother, feem to be the consequence of his friendly goodness. The grateful family all join to reward him with their darling's hand; her heart supposed to be already his. He, like the man of honour he is, concludes himself bound by his former offers. They accept him upon thole terms. lady's merits shine out with transcendent lustre in the eyes of every one, even of us his fifters, and of you, Harriet, and your best friends: Must they not in his, to whom merit was ever the first, beauty but the fecond attractive? He had no tie to any other woman on earth: He had only the tenderness of his own heart, with regard to Miss Byron, to contend with. Ought he not to have contended B 2 with it? He did; and fo far conquered, as to exable himself to be just to the lady, whose great qualities, and the concurrence of her friends in his favour, had converted compassion for her into love. And who, that hears her story, can forbear to love her? But with what tenderness, with what politeness, does he, in his letter to his chosen correspondent, express himself to Miss Byron! He declares, that if she were not to be happy, it would be a great abatement of his own felicity. You, however, remember how politely he recals his apprehensions that you may not, on his account, be altogether fo happy as he wishes, as the suggestions of his own prefumption; and cenfures himfelf for barely supposing, that he had been of confequence enough with you to give you pain.

How much to your honour, before he went over, does he account for your fmiles, for your frankness of heart, in his company! He would not build upon them: Nor indeed could he know the state of your heart, as we did: He had not the opportunity. How filly was your punctilio, that made you fometimes fancy it was out of mere compassion that he revealed to you the state of his engagement abroad! You fee he tells you, that fuch was his opinion of your greatness of mind, that he thought he had no other way but to put it in your power to check him, if his love for you should stimulate him to an act of neglect to the lady to whom (the having never refused him, and not being then in a condition either to claim him, or fet him free) he thought himself under obligation. Don't you revere him for his honour to her, the nature of her malady confidered?—What must he have fuffered in this conflict!

Well, and now, by a strange turn in the lady, but glorious to herself, as he observes, the obstacle removed, he applies to Miss Byron for her favour. How sensible is he of what delicacy requires from her! How justly (respecting his love for

for the it, h ter the tion befo fom diffi he i love the you offer ed f cy, ture wor it in han he t himwho ter next will You the him have nob dow to be you a m great in his r into orbear what orrefde dewould You, is apnt, be gestiimself confe-

went your would know d not Ailio, mere of his that mind, put it r you e lady d not m, or ation. , the lady, obstaer faey res love for ust he

for you) does he account for not postponing, for the fake of cold and dull form, as he justly expresses it, his address to you! How greatly does the letter he delivered to you favour his argument! Ah the poor Clementina! Cruel perfuaders her relations! I hate and pity them, in a breath. Never, before, did hatred and pity meet in the same bofom, as they do in mine, on this occasion. difficulties, my dear, and the uncommon fituation. he is in, as if he were offering you but a divided love, enhance your glory. You are reinstated on the female throne, to the lowermost step of which you once was afraid you had descended. You are offered a man, whose perplexities have not proceeded from the entanglements of intrigue, inconstancy, perfidy; but from his own compassionate nature: And could you, by any other way in the world than by this supposed divided love, have had it in your power, by accepting his humbly-offered hand, to lay him under obligation to you, which he thinks he never shall be able to discharge? Lay him --- Who? -- Sir CHARLES GRANDISON --- For whom fo many virgin hearts have fighed in vain! -And what a triumph to our fex is this, as well as to my Harriet!

And now, Harriet, let me tell you, that my sister and I are both in great expectations of your next letter. It is, it must be, written before you will have this. My brother is more than man: You have only to shew yourself to be superior to the forms of woman. If you play the fool with him, now that you have the power you and we have so long wished you—If you give pain to his noble, because sincere heart, by any the least shadow of semale affectation; you, who have hitherto been distinguished for so amiable a frankness; you who cannot doubt his honour—the honour of a man who solicits your savour even in a great manner, a manner in which no man before him

B 3

evep

ever courted a woman, because few men before him have ever been fo particularly circumstanced; a manner that gives you an opportunity to outshine, in your acceptance of him, even the noble Clementina in her refusal; as bigotry must have been, in part, her motive-If I fay you act foolishly, weakly, now-Look to it-You will depreciate, of not cast away, your own glory. Remember you have a man to deal with, who, from the behaviour of us his fifters to Mrs Oldham, at his first return to England, took measure of our minds, and, without loving us the lefs for it, looked down upon us with pity; and made us, ever fince, look upon ourselves in a diminishing light, and as fifters who have greater reason to glory in their brother, than he has in them. Would you not rather, you who are to stand in a still nearer relation to him, invite his admiration, than his pity? Till last Friday night you had it: What Saturday has produced, we shall foon guess.

Not either Lord L. or Lord G. not Emily, not aunt Eleanor, now, either see or hear read what you write, except here and there a passage, which you yourself would not scruple to hear read to them. Are not you our third sister? To each of us our next self: And, what gives still more dignitive the eleged wife of our brother!

ty, the elected wife of our brother!

Adieu, my love! In longing expectation of your next, we subscribe

Your affectionate

CAROLINE L. CHARLOTTE G.

vil

an fol

wr aft

of

dr wi

vil

fai

in

I

bo

to

he

Cl

do pr

to te

as ge

LETTER

LETTER III.

Miss BYRON, To Lady G.

Saturday, O.A. 14.

R Fenwick has just now been telling us, from the account given him by that Greville, vile man! how the affair was between him and Sir Charles Grandison. Take it briefly as follows :

About eight yesterday morning, that audacious wretch went to the George at Northampton; and after making his enquiries, demanded an audience of Sir Charles Grandison. Sir Charles was near dressed, and had ordered his chariot to be ready, with intent to visit us early.

He admitted of Mr Greville's visit. Mr Greville confesses, that his own behaviour was peremtory (his word for insolent, I suppose). I hear, Sir, said he, that you are come down into this county in order to carry off from us the richest jewel in it—I need not say whom. My name is Greville: I have long made my addresses to her, and have bound myself under a vow, that, were a prince to be my competitor, I would dispute his title to her.

You feem to be a princely man, Sir, faid Sir Charles, offended with his air and words, no doubt. You need not, Mr Greville, have told me your name: I have heard of you. What your pretentions are, I know not; your vow is nothing to me. I am master of my own actions; and shall not account to you, or any man living, for them.

I presume, Sir, you came down with the intention I have hinted at? I beg only your answer as to that. I beg it as a favour, gentleman to gentleman.

The

efore iced: outnoble have 1 act l de-Refrom n, at f our lookever light, ory in you earer is pi-what which ad to ch of ligni-

on of

E L.

ER

The manner of your address to me, Sir, is not such as will intitle you to an answer for your own sake. I will tell you, however, that I am come down to pay my devoirs to Miss Byron. I hope for acceptance; and know not that I am to make allowance for the claim of any man on earth.

Sir Charles Grandison, I know your character: I know your bravery. It is from that knowledge that I consider you as a fit man for me to talk to.

I am not a Sir Hargrave Pollexfen, Sir.

I make no account of who or what you are, Mr Greville. Your visit is not, at this time, a welcome one: I am going to breakfast with Miss Byron. I shall be here in the evening, and at leifure then to attend to any thing you shall think yourself authorised to say to me, on this or any other subject.

We may be overheard, Sir—Shall I beg you to walk with me into the garden below? You are going to breakfast, you say, with Miss Byron. Dear Sir Charles Grandison, oblige me with an audience, of five minutes only, in the back-yard, or garden.

In the evening, Mr Greville, command me any where: But I will not be broken in upon now.

I will not leave you at liberty, Sir Charles, to make your vifit where you are going, till I am gratified with one five minutes' conference with you below.

Excuse me then, Mr Greville, that I give orders, as if you were not here. Sir Charles rang. Up came one of his servants—Is the chariot ready? Almost ready, was the answer.—Make haste. Saunders may see his friends in this neighbourhood: He may stay with them till Monday. Frederick and you attend me.

He took out a letter, and read in it, as he walked about the room, with great composure, not regarding Mr Greville, who stood swelling, as he owned, at one of the windows, till the servant withdrew ;

wit

Ch

tuo

you

apa

ly

end

kn

wi

dr lon

am

na

rei

me

ev

yo ha

de

ha

rea

fa

po

In

fal

not own ome ope

dge to.

Mr wel-Byleilei-

on tooing Sir nce, len.

, to am vith

Up dy? afte. our-alkrehe ant withdrew; and then he addressed himself to Sir Charles in language of reproach on this contemptuous treatment.—Mr Greville, said Sir Charles, you may be thankful, perhaps, that you are in my apartment: This intrusion is a very ungentlemanly one.

Sir Charles was angry, and expressed impatience to be gone. Mr Greville owned, that he knew not how to contain himself, to see his rival, with so many advantages in his person and air, dressed avowedly to attend the woman he had so long—Shall I say, been troublesome to? For I am sure he never had the shadow of countenance from me.

I repeat my demand, Sir Charles, of a conference of five minutes below.

You have no right to make any demand upon me, Mr Greville: If you think you have, the evening will be time enough. But even then you must behave more like a gentleman than you have done hitherto, to intitle yourself to be considered as on a foot with me.

Not on a foot with you, Sir!—And he put his hand upon his fword. A gentleman is on a foot with a prince, Sir, in a point of honour-

Go, then, and find out your prince, Mr Greville: I am no prince: And you have as much reason to address yourself to the man you never saw, as to me.

His fervant just then shewing himself, and withdrawing; Mr Greville, added he, I leave you in possession of this apartment. Your servant, Sir. In the evening I shall be at your command.

One word with you, Sir Charles—One word—

What would Mr Greville? turning back.

Have you made propofals? Are your propofals accepted?

I repeat, that you ought to have behaved differently, Mr Greville, to be intitled to an answer to these questions.

Answer me, however, Sir: I beg it as a favour.

Sir Charles took out his watch.—After nine: I shall make them wait. But thus I answer you: I have made proposals; and, as I told you before, hope they will be accepted.

Were you any other man in the world, Sir, the man before you night question your success with a woman whose difficulties are augmented by the obsequiousness of her admirers. But such a man as you would not have come down on a fool's errand. I love Miss Byron to distraction. I could not shew my face in the county, and suffer any man out of it to carry away such a prize.

Out of the county, Mr Greville! What narrowness is this! But I pity you for your love of Miss

Byron: And-

You pity me, Sir! interrupted he.—I bear not fuch haughty tokens of superiority. Either give up your pretensions to Miss Byron, or make me fensible of it, in the way of a gentleman.

Mr Greville, your fervant: And he went down. The wretch followed him; and when they came to the yard, and Sir Charles was stepping into his chariot, he took his hand, several persons present—We are observed, Sir Charles, whispered he. Withdraw with me for a few moments. By the great God of Heaven, you must not refuse me. I cannot bear that you should go thus triumphantly on the business you are going upon.

Sir Charles fuffered himself to be led by the wretch: And when they were come to a private fpot, Mr Greville drew, and demanded Sir Charles to do the like, putting himself in a posture of defence.

Sir Charles put his hand on his fword, but drew it not. Mr Greville, faid he, know your own fafety; wr but ror faf

onl gua wit ted ow you wif not hur at due

don the ing

of gapa him and he his

And ami

acco

Mr

fafety; and was turning from him, when the wretch fwore he would admit of no alternative, but his giving up his pretentions to Mifs Byron.

His rage, as Mr Fenwick describes it from himfelf, making him dangerous, Sir Charles drew.—I only defend myself, said he—Greville, you keep no guard—He put by his pass with his sword; and, without making a push, closed in with him, twisted his sword out of his hand, and, pointing his own to his breast, You see my power, Sir—Take your life, and your sword—But it you are either wise, or would be thought a man of honour, tempt not again your fate.

And am I again mafter of my fword, and unhurt? 'Tis generous-The evening you fay?

Still I fay, I will be yours in the evening, either at your own house, or at my inn; but not as a duellist, Sir: You know my principles.

How can this be! and he fwore. How was it done?—Expose me not at Selby-house——How the devil could this be?—I expect you in the evening here.

He went off a back-way. Sir Charles, instead of going directly into his chariot, went up to his apartment; wrote his billet to my aunt to excuse himself, finding it sull late to get hither in time, and being somewhat discomposed in his temper, as he owned to us: And then he took an airing in his chariot, till he came hither to dine.

But how should we have been alarmed, had we known that Sir Charles declined supping here, in order to meet the violent man again at his inn! And how did we again blame ourselves for taking amifs his not fupping with us!

Mr Fenwick fays, that Mr Greville got him to accompany him to the George.

Sir Charles apologized, with great civility to Mr Greville, for making him wait for him. Mr Creville,

the ivate Sir pof-drew own fety;

ver

fa-

: I

ore,

the vith

the

nan

er-

ould

any ow-

Mifs

not give me

wn.

ame

his

he.

the Greville, had he been disposed for mischief, had no use of his right arm. It was strained by the twisting of his fword from it, and in a fling.

Sir Charles behaved to them both with great politeness; and Mr Greville owned, that he had acted nobly by him, in returning his fword, even before his passion was calmed, and in not using his own. But it was some time, it seems, before he was brought into this temper. What a good deal contributed to it was, Sir Charles's acquainting him, that he had not given particulars at Selbyhouse, or to any body, of the affray between them; but referred it to himself to give them as he should think proper. This forbearance he highly applauded, and was even thankful for it. Fenwick shall, in confidence, faid he, report this matter to your honour, and my own mortification, as the truth requires, at Selby-house. Let me not be hated by Miss Byron on this account. My passion gave me difadvantage. I will try to honour you, Sir Charles: But I must hate you if you succeed. One condition, however, I make: That you reconcile me to the Selbies and Miss Byron; and if you are likely to be fuccessful, let me have the credit of reporting that it is by my confent.

They parted with civility; but not, it feems, till a late hour. Sir Charles, as Mr Beauchamp and Dr Bartlett had told us, was always happy in making, by his equanimity, generofity, and forgiveness, fast friends of inveterate enemies. Thank God the iffue was not unhappy.

Mr Fenwick fays, that the rencounter is very little guessed at, or talked of [Thank God for that too!] and to those few who have enquired of Mr Greville or Mr Fenwick about it, it has been denied; and now Greville, as Mr Fenwick had done before, declares he will give out, that he yields up all his hopes of Miss Byron; but fays, that very land

to-n defin that under that for blow

M

pofa a fin have mine anfw can meri

W

ger itill a faid once tions him Nano mam to ac ded-i

Vo

it not

that Sir Charles Grandison, of whose address every body already talks, is the only man in England to whom he could resign his pretensions.

He infifts upon Sir Charles's dining with him to-morrow; Mr Fenwick's also. Sir Charles is so desirous that the neighbourhood should conclude, that he and these gentlemen are on a foot of good understanding, that he made the less scruple for every one's sake to accept of his invitation.

I am very, very thankful, my dearest Lady G. that the constant blusterings of this violent man, for so many months past, are so happily overblown.

Mr Fenwick, as I guessed he would, made proposals to my aunt and me for my Lucy. Lucy has a fine fortune: But if she had not, he should not have her: Indeed he is not worthy of Lucy's mind. He must be related to me, he said: But I answered, No man must call Lucy Selby his, who can have any other motive for his wishes but her merit.

We hourly expect your brother. The new danger he has been in on my account endears him still more to us all. How, how will you forbear, faid my uncle, throwing yourself into his arms at once, when he demands the result of our deliberations? If I follow Mr Deane's advice, I am to give him my hand at the first word: If Lucy's and Nancy's, he is not to ask me twice: If my grandmamma's and aunt's [they are always good], I am to act as occasion requires, and as my own consided in prudence will suggest at the time; but to be sure not to be guilty of affectation. But still, my dear ladies, something sticks with me (and ought it not?) in relation to the noble Clementina!

VOL. VII.

no

wif-

po-

actbe-

his

e he deal

ting

lby-

em;

ould

aud-

hall,

your truth

d by e me

arles:

ondi-

e me

a are lit of s, till

p and

ma-

rgive-hank

s very

d for quired

it has nwick hat he

t fays,

LETTER

LETTER IV.

Miss Byron. In Continuation.

Saturday Night, Oct. 14.

Now, my dear Ladies L. and G. let me lay before you, just as it happened, for your approbation or censure, all that has passed between the best of men and your Harriet. Happy shall I be if I can be acquitted by his sisters.

My grandmamma went home last night, but was here before Sir Charles; yet he came a little after eleven.

He addressed us severally with his usual politeness, and my grandmother particularly, with such an air of reverence as did him credit, because of her years and wisdom.

We all congratulated him on what we had heard from Mr Fenwick.

Mr Greville and I, faid he, are on very good terms. When I have the prefumption to think myfelf a welcome guest, I am to introduce him as my friend. Mr Greville, though so long your neighbour, modestly doubts his own welcome.

Well he may, faid my aunt Selby, after-No afters, dear madam, if you mean any thing that has paffed between him and me.

He again addressed himself to me. I rejoice, Sir, said I, that you have so happily quieted a spirit always thought uncontroulable.

You must tell me, madam, replied he, when I can be allowed to introduce Mr Greville to you?

Shall I answer for my cousin, said Lucy?—I did not, Sir Charles, think you such a designer.—You were not, you know, to introduce Mr Greville, till you were assured of being yourself a very welcome guest to my cousin.

I own my plot, replied he: I had an intent to felf. Y a m

furp

Jam (who dean is all

ly.
not

I fupp my

a 01

mar

affect A

and not kno fom

not

mad prud and on Har

fpea or n furprise Miss Byron into an implied favour to myfelf.

You need not, Sir Charles, thought I, take fuch a method.

On his taking very kind notice of my coufin James, Do you know, Sir Charles, faid my uncle (whose joy, when it overflows, seldom suffers the dear man to consult seasonableness), that that boy is already in love with your Emily?—The youth blushed—

14.

your tween hall I

it was after polite-

a fuch use of heard

good

think

him as

your

r-No

g that ce, Sir,

irit al-

when I

you?

-I did

-You

reville,

ry wel-

tent to ie.

I am obliged to every body who loves my Emily. She is a favourite of Miss Byron—Must she not then be a good girl?

She is indeed a favourite, faid I; and fo great a one, that I know not who can deferve her.

I faid this, left Sir Charles should think (on a supposition that my uncle meant something) that my cousin had my countenance.

Sir Charles then addressed himself to my grandmamma and aunt, speaking low—I hope, ladies, I may be allowed in your presence to resume the conversation of yesterday with Miss Byron?

No, Sir Charles, answered my grandmamma, affecting to look ferious, that must not be.

Must not be, madam! and he feemed surprised and affected too. My aunt was a little startled, but not so much as she would have been, had she not known the lively turns which that excellent parent sometimes gives to subjects of conversation.

Must not be, I repeat, Sir Charles: But I will not suffer you to be long in suspense. We have always, when proposals of this kind have been made, referred ourselves to our Harriet. She has prudence: She has gratitude. We will leave her and you together, when she is inclined to hear you on the interesting subject. I know I am right. Harriet is above disguises. She will be obliged to speak for herself, when she has not either her aunt or me to refer to. She and you are not acquaintance of yesterday. You, Sir, I dare fay, will not be displeased with the opportunity-

Neither Miss Byron nor I, madam, could wish for the absence of two such parental relations. But this reference I will presume to construe as a hopeful prognostic. May I now, through your mediation, madam [to my aunt], hope for the opportunity of addressing myself to Miss Byron?

My aunt, taking me to the window, told me what had passed. I was a little surprised at my grandmamma's reference to myself only. I expostulated with my aunt: It is plain, madam, that

Sir Charles expected not this compliment.

Your grandmamma's motion surprised me a little, my dear: It proceeded from the fullness of her joy: She meant a compliment to you both: There is now no receding. Let us withdraw together.

What, madam, at his proposal? As if expeding to be followed?—See how my uncle looks at me! Every one's eyes are upon me!—In the asternoon, if it must be—as by accident. But I had rather you and my grandmamma were to be present. I mean not to be guilty of affectation to him: I know my own heart, and will not disguise it. I shall want to refer to you. I shall be filly: I dare not trust myself.

I wish the compliment had not been made, replied my aunt. But, my dear, come along with me.

She went out. I followed her; a little reluctantly however; and Lucy tells me, that I looked so filly, as was enough of itself to inform every body of the intent of my withdrawing, and that I expected Sir Charles would follow me.

She was very cruel, I told her; and in my cafe would have looked as filly as I, while I thould have pitied bers

I led.

wa

to voi

fo :

cha

IW

int

wit

my

WO

lef

an

to

ma

dr

ad

m

he

m rec

he

de

WC

rep

ve

an

for cel lo

ro:

I led to my closet. My aunt, feating me there, was going from me. Well, madam, and so I am to stay here quietly, I suppose, till Sir Charles vouchsafes to come? Would Clementina have done so?

No hint to him of Clementina in this way I charge you: It would look ungrateful and girlish. I will introduce him to you—

And stay with me, I hope, madam, when he is introduced. I tell you, Lady G. all my foibles?

Away went my aunt, but foon returned, and with her the Man of men.

She but turned herfelf round, and faw him take my hand, which he did with a compliment that would have made me proud at another time, and left us together.

I was refolved then to assume all my courage, and, if possible, to be present to myself. He was to himself; yet had a modesty and politeness in his manner, which softened the dignity of his address.

Some men, I fancy, would have begun with admiring, or pretending to admire the pieces of my own workmanship which you have seen hang here: But not he. After another compliment made (as I presume to re-assure me) on my restored complexion [I did indeed seel my face glow], he spoke directly to his subject.

I need not, I am fure, faid he, repeat to my dear Miss Byron what I said yesterday as to the delicacy of my situation, with regard to what some would deem a divided or double love. I need not repeat to you the very great regard I have, and ever shall have for the lady abroad. Her merit, and your greatness of mind, render any apology for so just a regard needless. But it may be necessary to say, what I can with truth say, that I love not my own soul better than I love Miss Byron. You see, madam, I am wholly free with red wish

, will

s. But hopenediaportu-

ld me at my I ex-

efs of both: aw to-

rnoon, rather m: I m: I
it. I I dare

e, re-

lookn eveg, and

y cafe should

I led.

gard to that lady—free by her own choice, by her own will.—You fee, that the whole family build a part of their happiness on the success of my address to a lady of my own country. Clementina's wish always was, that I would marry; and only be careful, that my choice should not disgrace the regard she vouchsafed to own for me. Clementina, when she has the pleasure of knowing the dear lady before me, if that may be, by the name of Grandsson, will confess, that my choice has done the highest credit to the favour she honoured me with.

And will you not, my dear Lady G. be ready to ask, Could Sir Charles Grandison be really in earnest in this humble court (as if he doubted her favour) to a creature, every wish of whose heart was devoted to him? Did he not rather for his own fake, in order to give her the confequence which a wife of his ought to have, refolve to dignify the poor girl, who had fo long been mortified by cruel suspense, and who had so often despaired of ever being happy with the lord of her heart? O no, my dear, your brother looked the humble, the modest lover; yet the man of sense, of dignity in love. I could not but be assured of his affection, notwithstanding all that had passed: And what had passed that he could possibly have helped? - His pleas of the day before, the contents of Signor Jeronymo's letter were all in my mind.

He seemed to expect my answer. He only whose generously-doubting eye kept down mine, can tell how I looked, how I behaved—But hesitatingly, tremblingly, both voice and knees, as I sat; thus brokenly, as near as I remember, I answered, not withdrawing my hand, though, as I spoke, he more than once pressed it with his lips:—The honour of Sir Charles Grandison—Sir Charles Grandison—Sir Charles Grandison's honour—no one ever did, or ever can doubt.—I must own—I must confess—There I paused.

W hat

con of the down ken the but the An the lica 1 feff ow at like fer

my

the

the

By

glo Sir juf cha the you no

POI

What does my dear Miss Byron own?-What confess ?- Assure yourself, madam, of my honour, of my gratitude.-Should you have doubts, fpeak them. I defire your favour but as I clear up your doubts. I would speak them for you-I have spoken them for you. I own to you, madam, that there may be force in your doubts, which nothing but your generofity and affiance in the honour of the man before you, can induce you to get over. And thus far I will own against myself, that were the lady in whose heart I should hope an interest, to have been circumstanced as I was, my own delicacy would have been hurt; owing, indeed, to the high notion I have of the true female delicacy. -Now fay, now own, now confess, my dear Miss Byron-what you were going to confess.

This, Sir, is my confession—and it is the confession of a heart which I hope is as sincere as your own—That I am dazzled, (confounded, shall I say?) at the superior merits of the lady you so nobly, so like yourself, glory still in esteeming as she well deferves to be esteemed.

y her build

y adtina's l only ce the nenti-

dear me of done

ed me

ready

ally in heart

or his uence

o dig-rtified paired heart?

imble,

digni-

affec.

elped?

ents of nd.

whofe

an tell

; thus

ed, not

ke, he

he ho-

Gran-

doubt.

wied. What

And

Joy seemed to flash from his eyes—He bowed on my hand, and pressed it with his lips; but was either filent by choice, or could not speak.

I proceeded, though with a hesitating voice, a glowing cheek, and down-cast eye—I fear not, Sir, any more than she did, your honour, your justice, no nor your indulgent tenderness—Your character, your principles, Sir, are full security to the woman who shall endeavour to deserve from you that indulgence—But so justly high do I think of Lady Clementina and her conduct, that I fear—ah, Sir, I fear—that it is impossible—

I stopt—I am fure I was in earnest, and must look to be so, or my countenance and my heart were not allied.

What impossible !- What fears my dear Miss By-

Why

Why (thus kindly urged, and by a man of unquestionable honour) shall I not speak all that is in my mind? The poor Harriet Byron sears, she justly sears, when she contemplates the magnanimity of that exalted lady, that with all her care, with all her endeavours, she never shall be able to make the figure to Herself, which is necessary for her own tranquillity (however you might generously endeavour to assure her doubting mind). This,

Sir, is my doubt-and all my doubt.

Generous, kind, noble Miss Byron! in a rapturous accent—And is this all your doubt? Then must yet the man before you be a happy man; for he questions not, if life be lent him, to make you one of the happiest of women. Clementina has acted gloriously in preferring to all other considerations her religion and her country: I can allow this in her favour against myself: And shall I not be doubly bound in gratitude to her sister excellence, who, having not those trials, yet the most delicate of human minds, shews in my savour a frankness of heart which sets her above little forms and asfectation, and at the same time a generosity with regard to the merits of another lady which has see examples?

fipate that doubt.

I took out my handkerchief .-

My dear Miss Byron, proceeded he, with an ardour that bespoke his heart, you are goodness itself. I approached you with dissidence, with more than dissidence, with apprehension, because of your culin acqu it ming ore ful c kr

tic

fir

th:

1

the

Si

mo

fai

titl bel

per ha

Hi

do

late

eve

eye

aun

Sir

ver

gue

it fr refe

must

very

W

M

our tals, wn as his known delicacy, which I was afraid, on this occation, would descend into punctiliousness.—May blessings attend my future life, as my grateful heart thall acknowledge this goodness!——

Again he kissed my hand, rising with dignity. I could have received his vows on my knees; but I was motionless; yet how was I delighted to be the cause of joy to him!—Joy to your brother! to

Sir Charles Grandison!

He faw me greatly affected, and indeed my emotion increased on reflection. He considerately said, I will leave you, my dear Miss Byron, to intitle myself to the congratulations of all our friends below. From this moment, after a thousand suspenses and strange events, which, unsought-for, have chequered my past life, I date my happiness.

He most respectfully left me.

I was glad he did: Yet my eyes followed him. His very shadow was grateful to me as he went down stairs. And there, it seems, he congratulated himself, and called for the congratulations of every one present, in so noble a manner, that every eye ran over with joy.

Was I not right, said my grandmamma to my aunt (you half-blamed me, my dear), in leaving Sir Charles and my Harriet together? Harriet ever was above disguise. Sir Charles might have guessed at her heart; but he would not have known it from her own lips, had she had you and me to refer to:

Whatever you do, madam, answered my aunt, must be right.

My aunt came up to me. She found me in a very thoughtful mood. I had fometimes been accusing myself of forwardness, and at others was acquitting myself, or endeavouring to do so—yet mingling, though thus early, a hundred delightful circumstances with my accusations and acquittals, which were likely to bless my future lot: Such as his relations and friends being mine, mine his;

and an arnefs itth more of your known un-

is in

the n.mi-

with make r her

oufly

This,

rap-

Then

; for e you

a has nfide-

allow

I not

elicate

nkness

nd af-

with hand

thrice

, that

Could

ne! Be every art, e-

to dif-

and I run them all over by name. But my Emily, my dear Emily! I confidered as my ward as well as his. In this way my aunt found me. She embraced me, applauded me, and cleared up all my felf doubtings as to forwardness; and told me of their mutual congratulations below, and how happy I had made them all. What self-confidence did her approbation give me!—And as she assured me that my uncle would not rally, but extol me, I went down with spirits much higher than I went up with.

Sir Charles and my grandmamma were talking together, fitting fide by fide, when I entered the room. All the company stood up at my entrance.

O my dear! what a princes in every one's eye will the declared love of such a man make me! How will all the consequence I had before, among my partial friends and savourers, be augmented!

My uncle faid, fideling by me (kindly intending not to dash me), My sweet sparkler! (that was the name he used to call me before Sir Charles Grandison taught me a lesson that made me thoughful) You are now again my delight and my joy. I thank you for not being—a fool—that's all. Egad, I was afraid of your femality, when you came face to face.

Sir Charles came to me, and, with an air of the most respectful love, taking my hand, led me to a seat between himself and my grandmamma.

My ever dear Harriet, faid she, and condescended to lift my hand to her lips, I will not abash you; but must just say, that you have acquitted yourself as I wished you to do. I knew I could trust to a heart that ever was above affectation or disguise.

Sir Charles Grandison, madam, said I, has the generosity to distinguish and encourage a doubting Infinitely obliging, Miss Byron, replied he, preffing one hand between both his, as my grandmamma held the other, your condescension attracts both my the trickier

m ha

of

the dea Sei ced ple Of refutation of that plim

I will lars mak will py p fured her i of th

to be

alt 1

my love and reverence. Permit me to fay, that had not Heaven given a Miss Byron for the object of my hope, I had hardly, after what had betallen me abroad, ever looked forward to a wedded love.

IS

e

11

C

W

ce

ed

e, nt

ng

he

ce.

ye

ie!

ng

1!

ing

the

an-rad,

face

the

to a

end-

you;

rfelt

to a s the bting

pref-mams both my ife.

One favour I have to beg of you, Sir, refumed my grandmamma: It is, that you will never use the word abroad, or express persons by their countries; in fine, that you will never speak with referve when the admirable Clementina is in your thoughts. Mention her name with freedom, my dear Sir, to my child, to me, and to my daughter Seiby—you may—We always loved and reverenced her: Still we do so. She has given an example to all her sex, of a passion properly subdued—Of temporal considerations yielding to eternal!

Sir, faid I, bowing as I fat, I join in this request.

His eyes glistened with grateful joy. He bowed low to each, but spoke not.

My aunt came to us, and fat down by Sir Charles, refuting his feat, because it was next me. Let me, said she, enjoy your conversation: I have heard part of your subject, and subscribe to it with all my heart. Lady G. can testify for us all three, that we cannot be so mean as to intend you a compliment, Sir, by what has been said.

Nor can I, inadam, as to imagine it. You exalt yourfelves even more than you do Clementina. I will let my Jeronymo know some of the particulars which have given joy to my heart. They will make him happy; and the excellent Clementina (I will not sorbear her name) will rejoice in the happy prospects before me. She wanted but to be afford that the friend she so greatly honoured with her regard, was not likely (either in the qualities of the lady's mind, or in her family-connections) to be a sufferer by her declining his address.

May

May nothing now happen, my dear Lady G. to overcloud-But I will not be apprehensive. I will thankfully enjoy the prefent moment, and leave the future to the All-wife Disposer of events. Sir Charles Grandsfon be mine, and reward by his kindness my love, what can befal me that I ought not to bear with refignation?

But, my dear ladies, let me here ask you a question or two.

Tell me, did I ever, as you remember, fuffer by fuspenses, by any-thing?-Was there ever really fuch a man as Sir Hargrave Pollexfen! - Did I not tell you my dreams, when I told you of what I believed I had undergone from his perfecuting infults! It is well for the fake of preferving to me the grace of humility, and for the fake of warning (for all my days preceding that infult had been happy), that I wrote down at the time an account of those fufferings, those suspenses, or I should have been apt to forget now that I ever was unhappy.

And, pray let me ask, ladies, Can you guess what is become of my illness? I was very ill, you know, when you, Lady G. did us the honour of a vifit; fo ill, that I could not hide it from you and my other dear friends, as fain I would have done. I did not think it was an illness of fuch a nature, as that its cure depended on an eafy heart. fo much convinced of the merits of Lady Clementina, and that no other woman in the world ought to be Lady Grandison, that I thought I had pretty tolerably quieted my heart in that expectation. I hope I brag not too foon. But, my dear, I now feel fo eafy, fo light, fo happy—that I hardly know what's the matter with me-But I hope nobody will find the malady I have loft. May no disappointed heart be invaded by it! Let it not travel to Italy! The dear lady there has fuffered enough from a worse malady: Nor, if it stay in the island, let Th to n No, nex An Iw

My the

the Cha Bar inch cabi culto we a quel rals, Cha ned

M jects draw fo fo ces h man

with

M for a appre to m had b to blu my t Vo

to

will ave

If

his ght

uef-

ffer ealid I

vhat

ting

me

arn-

been

ount

ould un-

guess

you

of a

and

done.

ture,

I was men-ught

pret-

ation.

now

know

obody difap-

travel

nough

island,

let

let it come near the fighing heart of my Emily! That dear girl shall be happy if it be in my power to make her so. Pray, ladies, tell her she shall.—No, but don't: I will tell her so myself by the next post. Nor let it, I pray God, attack Lady Anne S. or any of the half-score ladies, of whom I was once so unwilling to hear.

Our discourse at table was on various subjects. My cousin James was again very inquisitive after the principal courts and places of note in Italy.

What pleasure do I hope one day to receive from the perusal (if I shall be favoured with it) of Sir Charles's LITERARY JOURNAL, mentioned to Dr Bartlett, in some of his letters from Italy! For it includes, I presume, a description of places, cities, cabinets of the curious, diversions, amusements, customs of different nations. How attentive were we all to the answers he made to my cousin James's questions! My memory serves but for a sew generals, and those I will not trouble you with. Sir Charles told my cousin, that if he were determined on an excursion abroad, he would surnish him with recommendatory letters.

Mr Greville and his infult were one of our fubjects after dinner, when the fervants were withdrawn. Lucy expressed her wonder that he was so soon reconciled to Sir Charles, after the menaces he had for years past thrown out against any man who should be likely to succeed with me.

My nucle observed, that Mr Greville had not for a long time had any hopes; that he always was apprehensive, that if Sir Charles Grandison were to make his addresses, he would succeed: That it had been his and Fenwick's custom, to endeavour to bluster away their competitors *. He possibly, my uncle added, might hope to intimidate Sir Vol. VII.

^{*} See Vol. I. Letter ii.

Charles; or at least, knowing his principles, might suppose he ran no risk in the attempt.

Mr Deane faid, Mr Greville had told him, that the moment he knew Mifs Byron had chosen her man, he would give up his pretensions; but that, as long as she remained single, he was determined to perfecute her, as he himself called it. Perfeverance he had known do every thing, after an admired woman had run through a circle of humble servants, and perhaps found herself disappointed in her own choice; and for his part, but with her, he had no fondness for the married life; he cared not who knew it.

Sir Charles spoke of Mr Greville with candour. He thought him a man of rough manners, but not ill-natured. He affected to be a joker, and often therefore might be taken for a worse man than he really was. He believed him to be careless of his reputation, and one who feemed to think there was wit and bravery in advancing free and uncommon things, and gloried in bold furprizes. For my part, continued he, I should hardly have consented to cultivate his acquaintance, much less to dine with him to-morrow, but as he infifted upon it, as a token of my forgiving in him a behaviour that was really what a gentleman should not have pardoned himself for. I considered him, proceeded Sir Charles, as a neighbour to this family, with whom you had lived, and perhaps chose to live upon good terms. Bad neighbours are nuisances, especially if they are people of fortune: It is in the power of fuch to be very troublesome in their own persons; and they will often let loofe their fervants to defy, provoke, infult, and do mischiet to those they love not. Mr Greville I thought, added he, deserved to be more indulged, for the fake of his love to Miss Byron. He is a proud man, and must be mortified enough in having it generally gene his f you betw

ville' with He thavi the coto be the pride triva It

Sir (

of it fay, row with that whif caut For and ladie quef

fwer

ways thou willi that with ville, his, leaft generally known that she had constantly rejected his suit.

Why that's true, faid my uncle. Sir Charles, you consider every body. But I hope all's over between you-

night

, that n her

that,

nined

Perfe-

er an hum-

point-

with

e; he dour.

ut not often an he

of his

e was mmon

or my nfent-

o dine

it, as

r that

e par-

ceeded

. with

live u-

fances,

is in n their

e their ought,

for the proud ving it

enerally

I have no doubt but it is, Mr Selby. Mr Greville's whole aim now feems to be, to come off with as little abatement of his pride as possible. He thinks, if he can pass to the world as one who, having no hope himself, is desirous to promote the cause of his friend, as he will acknowledge me to be, it will give him consequence in the eye of the world, and be a gentle method of letting his pride down easy.

Very well, faid my uncle; and a very good con.

trivance for a proud man, I think.

It is an expedient of his friend Fenwick, replied Sir Charles; and Mr Greville is not a little fond of it. And what, ladies and gentlemen, will you fay, if you should see me come to church to-morrow with him, sit with him in the same pew, and go with him to dinner in his coach! It is his request that I will. He thinks this will put an end to the whispers which have passed, in spite of all his precaution, of a rencounter between him and me: For he has given out, that he strained his wrist and arm by a fall from his horse. Tell me, dear ladies, shall I, or shall I not oblige him in this request? He is to be with me to-night for an answer.

My grandmamma faid, that Mr Greville was always a very odd, a very particular man. She thought Sir Charles very kind to us in being fo willing to conciliate with him. My uncle declared, that he was very defirous to live on good terms with all his neighbours, particularly with Mr Greville, a part of whose estate being intermixed with his, it might be in his power to be vexatious, at least to his tenants. Mr Deane thought the compromise was a happy one; and he supposed entirely agreeable to Sir Charles's generous wishes to promote the good understanding of his neighbours; and to the compassion it was in his nature to shew to an unsuccessful rival.

D 2 promife

Sir Charles then turning to Lucy, May I, Miss Selby, said he, do you think, without being too deep a designer, ask leave of Miss Byron, on the presumption of her goodness to me, to bring Mr Greville to drink tea with her to-morrow in the afternoon?

Your fervant, Sir Charles, answered Lucy, smiling. But what say you, cousin Byron, to this question?

This house is not mine, replied I; but I dare fay I may be allowed the liberty, in the names of my uncle and aunt, to answer, that any person will be welcome to Selby-house whom Sir Charles Grandison shall think proper to bring with him.

Mr Greville, said Sir Charles, professes himself unable to see any of you (Miss Byron in particular) without an introductor. He makes a high compliment to me, when he supposes me to be a proper one. If you give me leave, bowing to my uncle and aunt, I will answer him to his wishes; and hope, when he comes, every thing will be passed by in silence that has happened between him and me.

Two or three lively things passed between Lucy and Sir Charles, on her repetition of his word defigner. She began with advantage, but did not hold it; yet he gave her consequence in the little debate, at his own expence, as he seemed to in-

My grandmamma will go to her own church; but will be here at dinner, and the rest of the day. I have a thousand things more to say, all agreeable; but it is now late, and a drowsy sit has come feein tend that his in one by I whee did to be imag

ed w

Dear

tende

fore

enter

M

up

de which Fenw they the go Sir false s

was

us his apon

upon me. I will welcome it. Adieu, adieu, my dear ladies! Felicitate, I am fure you will,

Your ever-obliged, ever-devoted,

HARRIET BYRON.

LETTER V.

Miss Byron. In Continuation.

WE were told there would be a crouded church this morning, in expectation of feeing the new humble fervant of Mifs Byron attending her thither: For it is every-where known, that Sir Charles Grandison is come down to make his addresses to the young creature, who is happy in every one's love and good wishes; and all is now said to have been settled between him and us, by his noble sister, and Lord G. and Dr Bartlett, when they were with us. You see what credit you did us by your kind visit, my dear.—And we are to be married—O my dear Lady G.! you cannot imagine how soon.

Many of the neighbourhood feemed disappointed when they saw me led in by my uncle, as Mr Deane led my aunt, and Nancy and Lucy only attended by their brother. But it was not long before Mr Greville, Mr Fenwick, and Sir Charles entered, and went into the pew of the former, which is over against ours. Mr Greville and Mr Fenwick bowed low to us, severally, the moment they went into the pew, and to several others of the gentry.

Sir Charles had first other devoirs to pay: To false shame, you have said, he was always superior. I was delighted to see the example he set. He paid is his second compliments with a grace peculiar to

D 3

himfels

h Lucy ord delid not he little to in-ire-

s to urs;

hew

Miss

the Mr

the

fmi-

this dare nes of n will

Gran-

imfelf

rticu-

a high

o be a

to my vishes;

the day.
I agreeas come upon himself. I felt my face glow, on the whispering that went round. I thought I read in every eye admiration of him, even through the sticks of some of the ladies' fans.

What a difference was there between the two men and him in their behaviour, throughout both the fervice and fermon! Yet who ever beheld two of the three fo decent, fo attentive, fo reverent, I may fay, before? Were all who call themselves gentlemen (thought I, more than once) like this,

the world would yet be a good world.

Mr Greville had his arm in a sling. He seemed highly delighted with his guest; so did Mr Fenwick. When the sermon was ended, Mr Greville held the pew-door ready opened to attend our movements; and when we were in motion to go, he taking officiously Sir Charles's hand bent towards us. Sir Charles met us at our pew-door: He approached us with that easy grace peculiar to himself, and offered, with a prosound respect, his hand to me.

This was equal to a public declaration. It took every body's attention. He is not ashamed to avow in public what he thinks fit to own in private.

I was humbled more than exalted by the general notice. Mr Greville (bold, yet low man!) made a motion as if he gave the hand that Sir Charles took. Mr Fenwick offered his hand to Lucy. Mr Greville led my aunt; and not speaking low (subtle as a serpent!) My plaguy horse, said he, looking at his sling, knew not his master. I invite myself to tea with you, madam, in the afternoon. You will supply my lame arm, I hope, yourself.

There is no fuch thing as keeping private one's movements in a country-town, if one would. One of our fervants reported the general approbation. It is a pleasure surely, my dear ladies, to be ad-

dreffed

1

n

W

li

a

ing

din

ret

to affe

ering

eye

fome

both

d two ent, I

felves

this,

eemed

Fen-

reville

d our

to go,

nt to-

door:

liar to et, his

It took

to a-

in prigene-

man!)

nat Sir

and to fpeak.

horse,

malter.

in the

I hope,

e one's

d. One

bation.

be addressed to by a man of whom every one approves. What a poor figure must she make, who gives way to a courtship from a man commonly deemed unworthy of her! Such women indeed commonly confess indirectly the folly, by carrying on the affair clandestinely.

Sunday Evening.

O MY dear! I have been strangely disconcerted by means of Mr Greville. He is a strange man. But I will lead to it in course.

We all went to church again in the afternoon. Every body who knew Mr Greville took it for a high piece of politeness in him to his guest, that he came twice the same day to church. Sir Charles edified every body by his chearful piety. Are you not of opinion, my dear Lady G. that wickedness may be always put out of countenance by a person who has an established character for goodness, and who is not ashamed of doing his duty in the public eye? Methinks I could wish that all the profligates in the parish had their seats around that of a man who has fortitude enough to dare to be good. The text was a happy one to this purpose: The words of our Saviour: "Whosoever shall be alhamed of me and of my words, in this adulterous and finful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels."

Sir Charles led my aunt to her coach, as Mr-Greville officiously, but properly for his views, did me. We found Mr Fenwick at Selby-house talking to my grandmamma on the new subject. She dined with us; but, not being very well, chose to retire to her devotions in my closet, while we went to church, she having been at her own in the morning.

We all received Mr Greville with civility. He affects to be thought a wit, you know, and a great joker.

joker. Some men cannot appear to advantage without making their friend a butt to shoot at. Fenwick and he tried to play upon each other, as usual. Sir Charles lent each his smile; and, whatever he thought of them, shewed not a contempt of their great-boy snip-snap. But, at last, my grandmamma and aunt engaged Sir Charles in a conversation, which made the gentlemen so silent, and so attentive, that had they not slashed a good deal at each other before, one might have thought them a little discreet.

ab ha

WC

tat

ma ly

mi

po

tha pra

Th

ru

IV

fro

am

nev fay cou

ler,

arr

nou

you

ed .

cha

be?

who

deft

that

to b

Nobody took the least notice of what had passed between Mr Greville and Sir Charles, till Mr Greville touched upon the subject to me. He defired an audience of ten minutes, as he said; and, upon his declaration, that it was the last he would ever ask of me on this subject; and upon my grandmamma's saying, Oblige Mr Greville, my dear, I permitted him to draw me to the window.

His address was nearly in the following words; not speaking so low, but every one might hear him, though he faid aloud, Nobody must but me.

I must account myself very unhappy, madam, in having never been able to incline you to shew me favour. You may think me vain: I believe I am fo: But I may take to myself the advantages and qualities which every body allows me. I have an estate that will warrant my addresses to a woman of the first rank; and it is free, and unincumbered. I am not an ill-natured man. I love my jest, 'tis true; but I love my friend. You good women generally do not like a man the lefs for having fomething to mend in him. I could fay a great deal more in my own behalf, but that Sir Charles Grandison (looking at him) quite eclipses me. Devil fetch me, if I can tell how to think myself any-thing before him. I was always afraid of him. But when I heard he was gone abroad, in pursuit of a former love, I thought I had another chance for it.

Yet I was half-afraid of Lord D. His mother would manage a Machiavel. He has a great eftate; a title; he has good qualities for a nobleman. But when I found that you could fo fleadily refuse him, as well as me, There must be some man, thought I, who is lord of her heart. Fenwick is as sad a dog as I; it cannot be he. Orme, poor soul! she will not have such a milk-sop as that neither—

Mr Orme, Sir, interrupted I, and was going to praise him—But he said, I will be heard out now: This is my dying speech; I will not be interrupted.

Well then, Sir, fmiling, come to your last words as foon as you can.

age

at.

, as

ind,

on-laft,

irles

n fo

ed a

ave paf-

Mr

de-

and,

ould

my niy

win-

rds;

him,

dam,

elieve

tages

e. I

to a unin-

love

You

e less

could

that

ite eow to lways

gone

proad;

I have told you before now, Miss Byron, that I will not bear your smiles: But now, smiles or frowns, I care not. I have no hopes left; and I am resolved to abuse you before I have done.

Abuse me !- I hope not, Sir.

"Hope not!" What fignify your hopes, who never gave me any? But hear me out. I shall say some things that will displease you; but more of another nature.—I went on guessing who could be the happy man.—That second Orme, Fowler, cannot be he; thought I. Is it the newly-arrived Beauchamp? He is a pretty sellow enough [I had all your footsteps watched, as I told you I would]. No, answered I myself, she resuschamp came to England—Who the devil can he be?—But when I heard that the dangerous man, whom I thought gone abroad to his matrimonial destiny, was returned unmarried; when I heard that he was actually coming northward, I began to be again as afraid of him.

Last

Last Thursday night I had intelligence that he was seen at Dunstable in the morning, in his way towards us. Then did my heart fail me. I had my spies about Selby-house: I own it. What will not love and jealousy make a man do? I understand that your uncle and Mr Deane, and a tribe of servants for train-sake, were set out to meet him. How I raved! How I cursed! How I swore!—They will not surely, thought I, allow my rival, at his sirst visit, to take up his residence under the same roof with this charming witch!

Witch! Mr Greville-

Witch! Yes, Witch! I called you ten thousand names, in my rage, all as bad as that. Here, Jack, Will, Tom, George, get ready instantly each a dozen firebrands! I will light up Selby house for a bon-fire, to welcome the arrival of the invader of my freehold! And prongs and pitchforks shall be got ready to push every soul of the family back into the slames, that no one of it may escape my vengeance—Horrid man! I will hear no more.

You must! You shall! It is my dying speech, I tell you.

A dying man should be penitent.

To what purpose?—I can have no hope. What is to be expected for or from a despairing man?—But then I had intelligence brought me, that my rival was not admitted to take up his abode with you. This faved Selby-house. All my malice then was against the George at Northampton. The keeper of it owes, said I to myself, a hundred thousand obligations to me; yet to afford a retirement to my deadliest soe!—But 'tis more manly, thought I, in person, to call this invader to account, if he pretends an interest at Selby-house; and to force him to relinquish his pretensions to the queen of it; as I had made more than, one gallant sellow do before, by dint of bluster.

I flept

m

W

go

ma

ref

if hir

con

me.

WO

foll

vat

dea

I to had wea

had cy c

with trai

hief

ued

Went

earth M ed in ceede

t ni

Would Voked

I owe

when

one b

Ig

I flept not all that night. In the morning I made my vifit at the inn. I pretend to know as well as any man what belongs to civility and good manners; but I knew the character of the man I had to deal with: I knew he was cool, yet resolute. My rage would not let me be civil; and if it would, I knew I must be rude to provoke him. I was rude. I was peremtory.

Never were there fuch cold, fuch phlegmatic contempts passed upon man, as he passed upon me. I came to a point with him. I heard he would not fight: I was refolved he should. I followed him to his chariot. I got him to a private place; but I had the devil, and no man, to deal with. He cautioned me, by way of infult, as I took it, to keep a guard. I took his hint. I had better not; for he knew all the tricks of the weapon. He was in with me in a moment. I had no fword left me, and my life was at the mercy of his. He gave me up my own fword-Cautioned me to regard my fafety; put up his: withdrew.—I found myfelf fenfible of a damnable train. I had no right arm. I flunk away like a thief. He mounted his triumphal car; and purfued his course to the Lady of Selby-house. I went home, curfed, fwore, fell down, and bit the earth.

My uncle looked impatient: Sir Charles feemed in suspense, but attentive. Mr Greville pro-

I got Fenwick to go with me, to attend him at night, by appointment. Cripple as I was, I would have provoked him: He would not be prowoked: And when I found that he had not expofed me at Selby-house; when I remembered that lowed my fword and my life to his moderation; when I recollected his character; what he had done by Sir Hargrave Pollexfen; what Bagenhall and told of him: Why the plague, thought I,

I flept

he

way

had hat

un-

nd a t to

How

llow

ence

isand

Here,

each house

inva-

forks

amily

ay el.

peech,

What

nan ?—

hat my de with malice

ampton.

, a hun-

afford a

is more invader

t Selby-

preten-

ore than,

luster.

h!

fhould I (hopeless as I am of succeeding with my charming Byron, whether he lives or dies) set my face against such a man? He is incapable either of insult or arrogance: Let me (Fenwick advised a scheme; let me) make him my friend to save my pride, and the devil take the rest, Harriet Byron, and all—

Wicked man!-You were dying a thousand words ago-I am tired of you-

You have not, madam, heard half my dying words yet—But I would not terrify you—Are you terrified?

Indeed I am.

Sir Charles motioned as if he would approach us; but kept his place on my grandmamma's faying, Let us hear his humour out: Mr Greville was always particular.

Terrified, Madam! What is your being terrified to the fleepless nights, to the tormenting days, you have given me? Cursing darkness, cursing light, and most myself!—O madam! with shut teeth, what a torment of torments have you been to me!—Well, but now I will hasten to a conclusion, in mercy to you, who, however, never shewed me any—

I never was cruel, Mr Greville-

But you was; and most cruel, when most sweet-tempered. It was to that smiling obligingness that I owed my ruin! That gave me hope; that radiance of countenance; and that frozen heart!

O you are a dear deceiver!—But I hasten to conclude my dying speech—Give me your hand!

I will have it—I will not eat it, as once I had like to have done—And now, madam, hear my parting words—"You will have the glory of giving to the best of men the best of wives. Let it not be long before you do, for the take of many, who will hope on till then. As your lower, I must hate him: As your husband, I will love tra mo hay Te bleffi Ha

* 1

* ti

· a

· m

· cl

as

My ville!

He lo

He hand eyes. holding withdrary, Sir to your — Happ

Sir C prefent i clared a me to m ed by the ferve the

May I grandma The

Charles's precipitate came to the Vol.

love him. He will, he must be kind, affectionate, grateful to you; and you will deserve all his tenderness. May you live (the ornaments of human nature as you are) to fee your children's children; all promiting to be as good, as worthy, as happy, as yourselves! And full of years, full of honour, in one hour may you be stranslated to that Heaven where only you can be ' more happy than you will be, if you are both as happy as I with and expect you to be!"

Tears dropt on my cheek at this unexpeded bleffing.

n

1-

ed

etess

hat

rt!

to nd!

had

my giv-

Let

e ot

r lo-

will

love

He still held my hand—I will not, without your leave, madam—May I, before I part with it?—He looked at me as if for leave to kifs my hand, bowing his head upon it.

My heart was opened. God bless you, Mr Greville! as you have blessed me.—Be a good man, and he will-I withdrew not my hand.

He kneeled on one knee; eagerly kissed my hand more than once. Tears were in his own eyes. He arose, hurried me to Sir Charles, and holding to him my then, through surprize, half-withdrawn hand—Let me have the pride, the glory, Sir Charles Grandison, to quit this dear hand to yours. It is only to yours that I would quit it—Happy, happy, happy pair!—None but the brave deferve the sair—

Sir Charles took my hand—Let this precious present be mine, said he (kissing it), with the declared assent of every one here; and presented me to my grandmamma and aunt. I was affrighted by the hurry the strange man had put me into—

May I but live to fee her yours, Sir! faid my grandmamma, in a kind of rapture!

The moment he had put my hand into Sir Charles's, he ran out of the room with the utmost precipitation. He was gone, quite gone, when he came to be enquired after; and every body was uneasy for him, till we were told, by one of the fervants, that he took from the window of the outward parlour his hat and sword; and by another, that he met him, his servant after him, hurrying away, and even sobbing as he slew.—Was there ever so strange a man?

Vol. VII. E uncally

Don't you pity Mr Greville, my dear?
Sir Charles was generously uneasy for him.

Mr Greville, faid Lucy (who had always charity for him), has frequently surprised us with his particularities; but I hope, from the last part of his behaviour, that he is not the free-thinking man he sometimes affects to be thought. I flatter myself, that Sir Charles had a righter notion of him than we, in what he said of him yesterday.

Sir Charles waited on my grandmamma home; fo we had him not to supper. We are all to dine with her to-morrow. Your brother, you may suppose, will be a principal guest.

Monday Morning, Oct. 16.

I HAVE a letter from my Emily; by which I find the is with you; though the has not dated it. You were very kind in shewing the dear girl the overflowings of my heart in her favour. She is all grateful love and goodness. I will soon write to her, to repeat my affurances, that my whole power shall always be exerted to do her pleasure: Bu you must tell her, as from yourself, that she must have patience. I cannot ask her guardian such a question as the puts, as to her living with me, till I an likely to fucceed. Would the fweet girl have m make a request to him, that shall shew him I a fuppoling myself to be his before I am so? W are not come fo far on our journey by feveral ha ges. And yet, from what he intimated last night as he waited on my grandmamma to Shirle manor, I find, that his expectations are forward than it will be possible for me to answer: And faid faid fhe o and o

Our

m

CO

th cv

th

fho

he

the que

Wri

cov

doe

con

filia

in it

lett, I giv

us!

is no

cordi

to m from concl

to the

was ( overf

rell d

Di

Na

M

Si

mu

must, without intending the least affectation, forcommon decorum-sake, take the management of this point upon myself. For, my dear, we are every one of us here so much in love with him, that the moment he should declare his wishes, they should be as ready to urge me to oblige him, were he even to limit me but to two or three days, as if they were afraid he would not repeat his request.

I have a letter from Mr Beauchamp. He writes, that there are no hopes of Sir Harry's recovery. I am very forry for it. Mr Beauchamp does me great honour to write to me to give me confolation. His is a charming letter—So full of filial piety!—Excellent young man! He breathes in it the true spirit of his friend.

Sir Charles and his Beauchamp, and Dr Bartlett, correspond, I presume, as usual. What would I give to see all Sir Charles writes that relates to Mr Fenwick just now tells us, that Mr Greville is not well, and keeps his chamber. He has my cordial wishes for his health. His last behaviour to me appears, the more I think of it, more strange, from such a man. I expected not that he would conclude with such generous wishes.

Nancy, who does not love him, compares him to the wicked prophet of old, blefling where he was expected to curfe *; and fays, it was fuch an overstrain of generosity from him, that it might well overfet him.

Did you think that our meek Nancy could have faid so severe a thing? But meekness offended (as she once was by him) has an excellent memory, and can be bitter.

We are now preparing to go to Shirley-manor.
Our cousins Patty and Kitty Holles will be there
E 2

narih his rt of man

my-

the

an-

nur-Was him nome; o dine may

I find ted it. irl the She is n write whole re: But aft have question question ill I an ave moint I an fo? We eral staff night

: And

^{*} Balaam, Numb. xxit. et feq.

at dinner. They have been for a few weeks past at their aunt's, near Daventry. They are impatient to see Sir Charles. Adieu, my dearest ladies! Continue to love

Your HARRIET BYRON.

LETTER VI.

Mif Byron. In Continuation.

Monday Night, October 16.

We have been very happy this day at my grandmamma's. Your brother makes himself more and more beloved by all my friends; who yet declare, that they thought they could not have loved him better that they did before. My cousins Holles say, they could sooner lay open their hearts to him than to any man they ever saw; yet their freedom would never make them lose sight of their respect.

He told me, that he had breakfasted with Mr Greville. How does he conciliate the mind of every one to him! He said kind and compassionate things of Mr Greville; and so unaffectedly!—I was delighted with him. For, regardful as he would be, and is, of his own honour, no low, narrow jealousy, I dare say, will ever have entrance into his heart. Charity thinketh no evil! Of what a charming text is that a part *!—What is there equal to it in any of the writings of the philosophers?

My dear Miss Byron, faid he to me, Mr Greville loves you more than you can possibly imagine. Despairing of success with you, he has assumed airs of bravery; but your name is written in large letters in his heart. He gave me, continued he, it.

the

ron her; Mr

You him, will will

accor

ange prince hope, caval own pain. rence ner o ftand his fp

Sir deal of fingle make, a profin old man!

it as l

Let with a ten by face; hand o the importance of asking my leave to love you still —What ought I to have answered?

What did you answer, Sir?

That fo far as I might presume to give it I gave

Had I the honour, added I, of calling Mifs Byron mine, I would not barely allow your love of her; I would demand it.—Have I not affured you, Mr Greville, that I look upon you as my friend?

You will quite subdue Mr Greville, Sir, said I. You will, by the generosity of your treatment of him, do more than any body else ever could—You will make him a good man.

Mr Greville, madam, deferves pity, on more accounts than one. A wife, such a one as his good angel led him to wish for, would have settled his principles. He wants steadines: But he is not, I hope, a bad man. I was not concerned for his cavalier treatment of you yesterday, but on your own account, lest his roughness should give you pain. But his concluding wishes, and his preference of a rival to himself, together with the manner of his departure, unable as he was to withstand his own emotions, and the effect it had upon his spirits, so as to confine him to his chamber, had something great in it—And I shall value him sor it as long as he will permit me.

Sir Charles and my grandmamma had a good deal of talk together. Dearly does the love to fingle him out. What a pretty picture would they make, could they be both drawn fo as not to cause a profane jester to fall into mistakes, as if it were an old lady making love to a handsome young man!

Let me sketch it out—See, then, the dear lady, with a countenance full of benignity, years written by venerableness rather than by wrinkles in her face; dignity and familiarity in her manner; one hand on his, talking to him: His fine countenance

E 3 fhining

Gregine.
umed large d he,

111

1-

s!

N.

my kes

ds;

not

My

pen

ever

hem

Mr

d of lion-

!-I

s he

low,

en-

evil!

N hat

fhining with modelty and reverence, looking down delighted, as admiring her wisdom, and not a little regardful of her half-pointing finger [let that be for fear of mistakes] to a creature young enough to be her grand-daughter; who, to avoid shewing too much fensibility, shall seem to be talking to two other young ladies [Nancy and Lucy, suppose]; but, in order to distinguish the young creature, let her, with a blushing cheek, cast a sly eye on the grandmamma and young gentleman, while the other two shall not be afraid to look more free and unconcerned.

See, my dear, how fanciful I am: But I had a mind to tell you, in a new manner, how my grandmamma and Sir Charles feem to admire each other.

Mr Deane and he had also some talk together; my uncle joined them: And I blushed in earness at the subject I only guessed at from the sollowing words of Mr Deane, at Sir Charles rising to come from them to my aunt and me, who both of us sat in the bow-window. My dear Sir Charles Grandison, said Mr Deane, you love to give pleasure: I never was so happy in my life as I am in view of this long wished-for event. You must oblige me: I insit upon it.

My aunt took it as I did.—A generous contention! faid she. O my dear! we shall all be too happy. God grant that nothing may fall out to disconcert us! If there should, how many broken hearts-

The first broken one, madam, interrupted I, would be the happiest: I, in that case, should have the advantage of every body.

Dear love! you are too serious [tears were in my eyes]: Sir Charles's unquestionable honour is our security!—If Clementina be stedfast; if life and health be spared you and him—If—

Dear,

bu

fur

on lia

can

the

vaf

Ch

mo

you

but

the han

to s hoo

cou

he t mak

faw

and

Dor

tena

aunt part

help

nefs,

head

love

us t thou

of re

Sir (

your

I

Dear, dear madam, no more Ifs! Let there be but one If, and that on Lady Clementina's refumption. In that case I will submit, and God only (as indeed he always ought) shall be my reliance for the rest of my life.

Lucy, Nancy, and my two coufins Holles, came and spread, two and two, the other feats of the bow-window (there are but three) with their vast hoops; undoubtedly because they saw Sir Charles coming to us. It is difficult, whispered I to my aunt (petulantly enough), to get him one moment to one's felf. My cousin James (filly youth! thought I) flopt him in his way to me; but Sir Charles would not long be stopt: He led the interrupter towards us; and a feat not being at hand, while the young ladies were making a buftle to give him a place between them (tofling their, hoops above their shoulders on one side), and my cousin James was hastening to bring him a chair, he threw himself at the feet of my aunt and me, making the floor his feat.

I don't know how it was; but I thought I never faw him look to more advantage. His attitude and behaviour had fuch a lover-like appearance—Don't you fee him, my dear?—His amiable countenance, so artless, yet so obliging, cast up to my aunt and me: His fine eyes meeting ours; mine, particularly, in their own way; for I could not help looking down with a kind of proud bashfulness, as Lucy told me afterwards. How affected must I have appeared, had I either turned my head aside, or looked stiffly up to avoid his!

I believe, my dear, we women in courtship don't love that men, if ever so wise, should keep up to us the dignity of wisdom, much less that they should be solemn, formal, grave—Yet are we fond of respect and observance too.—How is it?—Sir Sir Charles Grandison can tell.—Did you think of your brother, Lady G. when you once said, that

the

Dear,

ng

let

ing

oid

ılk-

icy,

ung

fly

an,

nore

ad a

my

each

her;

est at wing come

ran-

fure:

view

oblige

e too

out to ted I, d have

were in nour is if life

the man who would commend himself to the general favour of us young women, should be a decent rake in his address, and a faint in his heart? Yet might you not have chosen a better word than rake? Are there not more clumfy and foolish rakes than polite ones, except we can be so much mistaken, as to give to impudence the name of agreeable freedom?

Sir Charles fell immediately into the easiest (shall I say the gallantest?), the most agreeable conversation, as if he must be all of a piece with the freedom of his attitude; and mingled in his talk two or three very pretty humorous stories; so that no body thought of helping him again to a chair, or withing him in one.

How did this little incident familiarize the amiable man, as a still more amiable man than before to my heart! In one of the little tales, which was of a gentleman in Spain serenading his mistress, we asked him if he could not remember a sonnet he spoke of as a pretty one? He, without answering, sung it in a most agreeable manner; and, at Lucy's request, gave us the English of it.

It is a very pretty fonnet. I will ask him for a copy and fend it to you, who understand the language.

My grandmamma, on Sir Charles's singing, beckoned to my cousin James, who going to her, she whispered him. He stept out, and presently returned with a violin, and struck up, as he entered, a minuet tune. Harriet, my love! called out my grandmamma. Without any other intimation, the most agreeable of men, in an instant, was on his feet, reached his hat, and took me out.

How were we applauded! How was my grandmamma delighted! The words Charming couple! were whifpered round, but loud enough to be heard. And when we had done, he led me to my hin fea

a d G. fine had Han

one fing.

whe

whice Char delig He

In to tel Sir C fome fron fi the eff nestest Charle to-mo his ari having its beir there v days as body a us, he to mak Saunde feat with an air that had all the real fine gentleman in it. But then he fat not down as before.— I wonder if Lady Clementina ever danced with him.

that Sin

My aunt, at Lucy's whispered request, proposed a dance beween Sir Charles and her. You, Lady G. observed, more than once, that Lucy dances finely. Insulter! whispered I to her, when she had done, you know your advantages over me!—Harriet, replied she, what do good girls deserve when they speak against their consciences?

1-

.

111

a-

e-

NO

no

or ni-

ore

was.

ess,

net

ver-

at or a langing,

her,

ently

e en-

alled

inti-

fant,

e out.

rand-

ouple!

to be

to my

feat

My grandmamma afterwards called upon me for one lesson on the harpsichord; and they made me sing.

An admirable conversation followed at tea, in which my grandmother, aunt, my Lucy, and Sir Charles bore the chief parts; every other person delighting to be silent.

Had we not, Lady G. a charming day?

In my next I shall have an opportunity, perhaps, to tell you what kind of a travelling companion Sir Charles is. For, be pleased to know, that for fome time past a change of air, and a little excurfion from place to place, have been prescribed for the establishment of my health, by one of the ho-nestest physicians in England. The day before Sir Charles came into these parts, it was fixed that to-morrow we should set out upon this tour. On his arrival, we had thoughts of postponing it; but having understood our intention, he insisted upon its being profecuted; and, offering his company, there was no declining the favour you know, early days as they however are: And although every body abroad talks of the occasion of his visit to us, he has been fo far from directing his fervants to make a fecret of it, that he has ordered his Saunders to answer to every curious questioner, that Sir Charles and I were of longer acquaintance than yesterday. But is not this, my dear, a cogent gent intimation, that Sir Charles thinks some parade, some delay necessary? Yet don't he and we know how little a while ago it is that he made his first declaration? What, my dear, (should he be solicitous for an early day) is the inference? My uncle, too, so forward, that I am afraid of him?

n

h

li

gu

m

th

no

m ch

ly

too

do

his

to

Telf

my

lov

unc was the

the Cha

a ru fure

niece

any cern

vifit

cy g

H

We are to fet out to-morrow morning. Peterborough is to be our furthest stage one way. Mr Deane insists that we should pass two or three days with him. All of us but my grandmamma are to be of this party.

O MY dear Lady G. what a letter is just brought me, by the hand that carried up mine on Saturday! Bless me! what an answer!—But I have not time to enter into so large a field. Let me only say, that for some parts I most heartily thank you and dear Lady L.; for others I do not, and imagine Lady L. would not have subscribed her beloved name had she read the whole. What charming spirits have you, my dear, dear Lady G.!—But, Adieu, my ever-amiable ladies, both!

HARRIET BYRON.

LETTER VII.

Miss Byron. In Continuation.

Thrapson, Tuesday Even. Oct. 17.

E passed several hours at Boughton , and arrived here in the asternoon. Mr Deane insisted that we should stop at a nephew's of his in the neighbourhood of this town. The young gentleman met us at Oundle, and conducted us to his house. I have got such a habit of scribbling, that ^{} The feat of the late Duke of Montagu.

I cannot forbear applying to my pen at every opportunity. The less wonder, when I have your brother for my subject: and the two beloved sifters of that brother to write to.

is

e

y

r -

Ir

ys.

to ht

ar-

ive

on-ink

her

ar-

G.

V.

. 17.

and leane

geno his

, that

can-

It would be almost impertinent to praise a man for his horsemanship, who in his early youth was so noted for the performance of all his exercises, that his father and General W. thought of the military life for him. Ease and unaffected dignity distinguish him in all his accomplishments. Bless me, madam, said Lucy to my aunt, on more occasions than one, this man is every thing!

Shall I own that I am retired to my pen just now from a very bad motive? Anger. I am, in my heart, even peevish with all my friends, for clustering so about Sir Charles, that he can hardly obtain a moment (which he seems to seek for too) to talk with me alone My uncle [he does dote upon him] always inconsiderately stands in his way; and can I say to a man-so very inclinable to raillery, that he should allow me more, and himself less of Sir Charles's conversation! I wonder my aunt does not give my uncle a hint. But she loves Sir Charles's company as well as my uncle.

This, however, is nothing to the diftress my uncle gave me at dinner this day. Sir Charles was observing upon the disposition of one part of the gardens at Boughton, that Art was to be but the handmaid of Nature—I have heard, Sir Charles, said my uncle, that you have made that a rule with you at Grandison hall. With what pleafure should I make a visit there to you and my niece—

He stopt. He needed not: He might have said any thing after this. Sir Charles looked as if concerned for me; yet said, that would be a joyful visit to him. My aunt was vexed for my sake. Lucy gave my uncle such a look—

My

My uncle afterwards indeed apologized to me—Ads-heart, I was a little blunt, I believe. But what a duce need there be these niceties observed when you are fure?—I am forry, however—But it would not—Yet you, Harriet, made it worse by looking so filly.

What, Lady G. can I do with this dear man? My uncle, I mean. He has been just making a proposal to me, as he calls it, and with such honest looks of forecast and wisdom—Look ye, Harriet—I shall be always blundering about your scrupulosities. I am come to propose something to you that will put it out of my power to make mistakes—I beg of you and your aunt, to allow me to enter with Sir Charles into a certain subject; and this not for your sake—I know you won't allow of that—But for the ease of Sir Charles's own heart. Gratitude is my motive, and ought to be yours. I am sure he loves the very ground you tread upon.

I befought him, for every fake dear to himself, not to interfere in the matter: but to leave these subjects to my aunt and me—Consider, Sir, said I, consider how very lately the first personal declaration was made.

I do, I will confider every thing-But there is danger between the cup and the lip.

Dear Sir! (my hands and eyes lifted up) was all the answer I could make. He went from me hastily, muttering good-naturedly against femalities.

Deane's Grove, Wedn. Oct. 18.

MR DEANE's pretty box you have feen. Sir Charles is pleafed with it. We looked in at Fotheringay-castle *, Milton †, &c. Mr Charles Deane,

+ The feat of Earl Fitzwilliams.

Dean man, W

curio ftopt garde

In or wh fo con appro diferin he-wa mifery those ' not la in his petenc trefs, ability the ob is fom never and th Such as and pr cyes.

I HAP paffed in thin y
mine;
carneft
to her,
tain ful
for his was obl dwing t

ke: I Vol.

^{*} The prison of Mary Queen of Scots.

Deane, a very obliging and fensible young gentleman, attended his uncle all the way.

What charming descriptions of fine houses and curiofities abroad did Sir Charles give us when we stopt to bait, or to view the pictures, furniture, gardens of the houses we faw!

t

3

A

et

14-u es

n-bn

of

rt.

I

n.

elf,

efe

I, ra-

is

was

me

ali-

8.

Sir

Fo-

rles

ane,

In every place, on every occasion on the road. or when we alighted or put up, he shewed himself fo confiderate, fo gallant, fo courteous to all who approached him, and fo charitable !- Yet not indiscriminately to every body that asked him: But he was bountiful indeed, on representation of the misery of two honest families. Beggars born, or those who make begging a trade, if in health, or not lame or blind, have feldom, it feems, any share in his munificence: But persons fallen from competence, and fuch as struggle with some instant diftrefs, or have large families, which they have not ability to maintain; these, and such as these, are the objects of his bounty. Richard Saunders, who is fometimes his almoner, told my Sally, that he never goes out but somebody is the better for him: and that his manner of bestowing his charity is fuch as, together with the poor people's bleffings and prayers for him, often draws tears from his eyes.

I have overheard a dialogue that has just now passed between my uncle and aunt. There is but a thin partition between the room they were in and mine; and he spoke loud; my aunt not low; yet earnest only, not angry. He had been proposing to her, as he had done to me, to enter into a certain subject, in pity to Sir Charles: None had he for his poor niece. No doubt but he thought he was obliging me; and that my objection was only owing to femality, as he calls it: A word I don't ke: I never heard it from Sir Charles.

Vol. VII. F My

My aunt was not at all pleased with his motion. She wished, as I had done, that he would not interfere in these nice matters. He took offence at the exclusion, because of the word nice. She said, he was too precipitating, a great deal: She did not doubt but Sir Charles would be full early in letting me know his expectations.

She spoke more decisively than she used to do. He cannot bear her chidings, though ever so gentle. I need not tell you that he both loves and reveres her; but, as one of the lords of the creation, is apt to be jealous of his prerogatives. You used to be diverted with his honest particularities.

What an ignoramus you women and girls make of me, Dame Selby! faid he. I know nothing of the world, nor of men and women, that's cer-I am always to be documented by you and your minxes! But the duce take your niceties: You don't, you can't, poor fouls as you are, distinguish men. You must all of you go on in one rig-my-roll way, in one beaten track. Who the duce would have thought it needful, when a girl and we all were wishing, till our very hearts were burfting, for this man, when he was not in his own power, that you must now come with your hums, and your harvs, and the whole circum-roundabouts of female nonfense, to stave-off the point your hearts and fouls are fet upon? I remember, Dame Selby, though fo long ago, how you treated your future lord and mafter, when you prank'd it as a lady and mistress. You vexed my very foul, I can tell you that! And often and often, when I left you, I fwore bitterly, that I never would come again as a lover—though I was a poor forsworn wretch-God forgive me!

My dear Mr Selby, you should not remember past things. You had very odd ways—I was afraid, for a good while, of venturing with you a all—

· Now

I ne

incr

Cha

nor to ri

man

felf-

your

I ho

up, gentl fuch

name

ney!

vice t I like

Gran

Dame

how,

of the

into y

infang

forms,

addref

all her

but, ri

do you

throug

must d fooths-

and de

take m

the two render

they w

No f

I am

Now, Dame Selby, I have you at a why not, or I never had, though by the way your un-evenness increased my oddness .- But what oddness is in Sir Charles Grandison? If he is not even, neither you nor I were ever odd. What reason is there for him to run the female gauntlope? I pity the excellent man, remembering how I was formerly vexed myfelf-I hate this Shilly-shally fooling; this knowyour mind and not know-your-mind nonfense. I hope to live and breath, I'll, I'll, I'll blow you all up, without gun-powder or oatmeal, if an honest gentleman is thus to be fooled with; and after fuch a letter too from his friend Jeronymo, in the names of the whole family. Lady G. for my money! [Ah, thought I, Lady G. gives better advice than she even wishes to know how to take!] I like her notion of parallel lines.—Sir Charles Grandison is none of your gew-gaw whip-jacks, that you know not where to have. But I tell you, Dame Selby, that neither you nor your niece know how, with your fine fouls, and fine fense, to go out of the common femality path, when you get a man into your gin, however superior he is to common infanglements, and low chicanery, and dull and cold forms, as Sir Charles properly called them, in his address to the little pug's face. I do love her, with all her pretty ape's tricks: For what are you all but, right or wrong, apes of one another?] And do you think, with all your wisdom, he sees not through you? He does; and, as a wife man, must despise you all, with your femalities and forfooths-

No femality, Mr Selby, is defigned-No-

I am impatient, Dame Selby, light of my cye, and dear to my heart and foul as you are; I will take my own way in this. I have no mind that the two dearest creatures in the world to me, should render themselves despisable in the eyes of a man they want to think highly of them. And here if

F 2

I put

· Now

tion.

in-

e at faid,

did

ly in

do.

gen-

d re-

crea-

You

rities.

make thing s cer-

and

You

guith

ny-roll

would ve all

ng, for

r, that barus,

non-

d fouls hough

rd and iftrefs.

! And

itterly,

though

e me!

nember

_I was

you at

I put in, and fay but a wry word, as you think it —I am to be called to account—

My dear, did you not begin the subject? faid my aunt.

I am to be closeted, and to be documentized, proceeded he—Not another word of your documentations, Dame Selby; I am not in a humour to bear them: I will take my own way—And that's enough.

And then, I suppose, he stuck his hands in his side, as he does when he is good-humouredly angry; and my aunt, at such times, gives up till a more convenient opportunity; and then she always carries her point (and why? Because she is always reasonable), for which he calls her a Parthian woman.

I heard her fay, as he stalked out royally, repeating that he would take his own way; I say no more, Mr Selby—Only consider—

Oy, and let Harriet confider, and do you confider, Dame Selby: Sir Charles Grandison is not a common man.

I did not let my aunt know that I heard this speech of my uncle: She only faid to me, when the saw me, I have had a little debate with your uncle: We must do as well as we can with him, my dear. He means well.

Thursday Morning, OA. 19.

AFTER breakfast, first one, then another, dropt away, and left only Sir Charles and me together. Lucy was the last that went; and the moment she was withdrawn, while I was thinking to retire to dress, he placed himself by me: Think me not abrupt, my dearest Miss Byron, said he, that I take almost the only opportunity which has offered of entering upon a subject that is next my heart.

I found my face glow. I was filent.

frie you a co CAM licat may own anot you fer t 3

Sir, ly va In a able

F

my l fpea

bow up to and my l

I

myfe H on o mad: you will many now

Very count

coun

will l

You have given me hope, madam: All your friends encourage that hope. I love, I revere your friends. What I have now to petition for is, a confirmation of the hope I have prefumed upon. Can you, madam (the female delicacy is more delicate than that of man can be), unequally as you may think yourself circumstanced with a man who owns that once he could have devoted himself to another lady; Can you say, that the man before you is the man whom you can, whom you do prefer to any other?

He stopt, expecting my answer.

After some hesitations, I have been accustomed, Sir, said I, by those friends whom you so deservedly value, to speak nothing but the simplest truth.
In an article of this moment, I should be inexcuseable if—

I stopt. His eyes were fixed upon my face. For my life I could not speak; yet wished to be able to speak.

If—If what, madam? and he fnatched my hand, bowed his face upon it, held it there, not looking up to mine. I could then fpeak—If thus urged, and by SIR CHARLES GRANDISON—I did not fpeak my heart—I answer—Sir—I CAN—I DO.

I wanted, I thought, just then, to shrink into myself.

He kissed my hand with servour; dropt down on one knee; again kissed it—You have laid me, madam, under everlasting obligation: And will you permit me before I rise—loveliest of women, will you permit me to beg an early day?—I have many affairs on my hands; many more in design, now I am come, as I hope, to settle in my native country for the rest of my life. My chief glory will be, to behave commendably in the private life. I wish not to be a public man; and it must be a very particular call, for the service of my king and country united, that shall draw me out into public.

You

k it

my

pro-

ntabear

s e.

his

an ill a ways

ways

wo-

, re-

I fay

onfi-

not a

this when

your

him,

19.

dropt

ether.

nt the

tire to ot ab-

I take

ered of

t.

husband I hope to be. I prescribe not to you the time; but you are above empty forms. May I presume to hope it will be before the end of a month to come?

He had forgot himfelf. He faid he would not prescribe to me.

After some involuntary hesitations—I am afraid of nothing so much, just now, Sir, said I, as appearing, to a man of your honour and penetration, affected. Rise, Sir, I beseech you! I cannot bear—

I will, madam, and rife as well as kneel, to thank you, when you have answered a question so very important to my happiness.

Before I could resume, only believe me, madam, said he, that my urgency is not the insolent urgency of one who imagines a lady will receive as a compliment his impatience. And if you have no scruple that you think of high importance, add, I beseech you, to the obligation you have laid him under to your condescending goodness (and add with that trankness of heart which has distinguished you in my eyes above all women) the very high one of an early day.

I looked down—I could not look up—I was afraid of being thought affected—Yet how could I fo foon think of obliging him?

He proceeded—You are filent, madam!—Propitious be your filence! Allow me to enquire of your aunt for your kind, your condescending acquiescence. I will not now urge you further: I will be all hope.

Let me fay, Sir, that I must not be precipitated.

There are very early days.

Much more was in my mind to fay; but I hefitated—I could not speak. Surely, my dear ladies, it was too early an urgency. And can a woman be wholly unobservant of custom, and the have or whe cha lav

thi

life tion is t hea for opp atte for cold Lo bre unfi Iw prif inte turn be t Joice fhou me faid prefi requilation ter You reluction aws

laws of her fex ?- Something is due to the fathion in our dress, however absurd that dress might have appeared in the last age (as theirs do to us), or may in the next : And shall not those customs which have their foundation in modefly, and are characteristic of the gentler sex, be intitled to ex-cufe, and more than excuse?

He faw my confusion. Let me not, my dearest life, diftress you, faid he. Beautiful as your emotion is, I cannot enjoy it if it give you pain. Yet is the question so important to me; so much is my heart concerned in the favourable answer I hope for from your goodness, that I must not let this opportunity flip, except it be your pleafure that I attend your determination from Mrs Selby's mouth -Yet that I chuse not neither; because I presume for more favour from your own, than you will, on cold deliberation, allow your aunt to shew me. Love will plead for its faithful votary in a fingle breaft, when confultation on the supposed fit and unfit, the object absent, will produce delay. But I will retire for two moments. You shall be my prisoner mean time. Not a foul shall come in to interrupt us, unless it be at your call. I will return and receive your determination; and if that be the fixing of my happy day, how will you rejoice me!

While I was debating within myfelf, whether I should be angry or pleased, he returned, and found me walking about the room. - Soul of my hope, faid he, taking with reverence my hand, I now presume that you can, that you will oblige me.

You have given me no time, Sir: But let me request, that you will not expect an answer, in relation to the early day you so early ask for, till aster the receipt of your next letters from Italy. You fee how the admirable lady is urged; how reluctantly she has given them but distant hope of complying with their wishes. I should be glad to wait

not raid

py

the y I

nth

apetrannot

1, to n fo

dam, gene no dd, I him add guithhigh was aould I

-Pronire of ng aoier : I itated.

I hefilear lacan a and the laws wait for the next letters; for those, at least, which will be an answer to yours, acquainting them, that there is a woman with whom you think you could be happy. I am earnest in this request, Sir.

Think it not owing to affectation.

I acquiesce, madam; the answer to those letters will foon be here. It will indeed be fome time before I can receive a reply to that I wrote in anfwer to Jeronymo's last letter. I impute not affectation to my dearest Miss Byron. I can easily comprehend your motive: It is a generous one. But it befits me to fay, that the next letters from Italy, whatever may be their contents, can now make no alteration on my part. Have I not declared myfelf to your friends, to you, and to the world?

Indeed, Sir, they may make an alteration on mine, highly as I think of the honour Sir Charles Grandison does me by his good opinion. pardon me, should the most excellent of women think of refuming a place in your heart-

Let me interrupt you, madam.-It cannot be that Lady Clementina, proceeding, as the has done, on motives of piety, zealous in her religion, and all her relations now earnest in another man's favour, can alter her mind. I should not have acted with justice, with gratitude, to her, had I not tried her stedfastness by every way I could de. vise: Nor, in justice to both ladies, would I allow myfelf to apply for your favour, till I had her resolution confirmed to me under her own hand after my arrival in England. But were it now poffible that the thould vary, and were you, madam, to hold your determination in my favour suspended, the confequence would be this: I should never, while that suspence lasted, be the husband of any woman on earth.

I hope, Sir, you will not be displeased. I did not think you would fo foon be fo very earnest.

fta kn in re do I

1

t

m

V

Ia rive WOI one nati tue in d an my

Si that as fl you

gion

conc. all th could ladies Sir little

My u am g This i riet, y at fur But this, Sir, I fay, let me have reason to think, that my happiness will not be the mistortune of a. more excellent woman, and it shall be my endeayour to make the man happy who only can make

He clasped me in his arms with an ardor—that displeased me not-on reflection-but at the time startled me. He then thanked me again on one knee. I held out the hand he had not in his, with intent to raise him; for I could not speak. He received it as a token of favour; kissed it with ardor; arose; again pressed my cheek with his lips; I was too much furprized to repulse him with anger: But was he not too free? Am I a prude, my dear! In the odious fense of the absurd word, I am fure I am not: But in the best sense, as derived from prudence, and used in opposition to a word that denotes a worse character, I own myself one of those who would wish to restore it to its natural respectable fignification, for the sake of virtue; which, as Sir Charles himself once hinted, is in danger of fuffering by the abuse of it; as religion once did, by that of the word Puritan.

Sir Charles, on my making towards the door that led to the stairs, withdrew with fuch a grace, as thewed he was capable of recollection.

Again I ask, Was he not too free? I will tell you how I judge that he was: When I came to conclude my narrative to my aunt and Lucy, of all that paffed between him and me, I blushed, and could not tell them how free he was. Yet you ice, ladies, that I can write it to you.

Sir Charles, my uncle, and Mr Deane, took a little walk, and returned just as dinner was ready. My uncle took me afide, and whispered to me; I am glad at my heart and foul the ice is broken. This is the man of true spirit-Ads-heart, Harriet, you will be Lady Grandison in a fortnight at furthest, I hope. You have had a charming confabulation,

I did earnelt.

h

at ld ir.

ers

en-

af-

ily

ne.

om

woor

de-

the

on rles

For,

men t be has

gion,

nan's

have

ad I

d de.

allow refo-

after poffi-

adam,

pend-

d ne-

and of

But

by Sir Charles's declaring himself more and more delighted with you. And he owns, that he put the question to you.—Hay, Harriet!—Smiling in my face.

Every one's eyes were upon me. Sir Charles, I believe, saw me look as if I were apprehensive of my uncle's raillery. He came up to us: My dear Miss Byron, said he, in my uncle's hearing, I have owned to Mr Selby the request I prefumed to make you. I am afraid that he, as well you, think me too bold and forward. If, madam, you do, I ask your pardon: My hopes shall always be controuled by your pleasure.

This made my uncle complaifant to me. I was re-affured. I was pleafed to be fo feafon-ably relieved.

Friday Morning, October 20.

You must not, my dear ladies, expect me to be fo very minute: If I am, must I not lose a hundred charming conversations? One, however, I will give you a little particularly.

Your brother defired leave to attend me in my dreffing-room—But how can I attempt to describe his air, his manner, or repeat the thousand agreeable things he said? Insensibly he fell into talking of future schemes, in a way that punctilio itself could not be displeased with.

He had been telling me, that our dear Mr Deane, having been affected by his last indisposition, had desired my uncle, my aunt, and him, to permit him to lay before them the state of his affairs, and the kind things he intended to do by his own relations; who, however, were all in happy circumstances. After which, he insisted upon Sir Charles's being his sole executor, which he scrupled; desiring that some other person should be joined with him in the trust: But Mr Deane be-

yo the nin

in

ho

But litie muc whe man will our dear the than long into indig tenan Byros their cousin will a The I miles —Visi pose to if (as world, Tear ceived mine in ed. I

ing

mentin

her bi

ing very earnest on this head, Sir Charles said, I hope I know my own heart: My dear Mr Deane, you must do as you please.

After some other discourse, I suppose, said I, the good man will not part with us till the beginning of next week.

t

n

S, ve

ly

g, e-ell

m, ays

ono be nun-

er, I n my cribe greelking

itTelf

r Mr isposi-

im, to his at-

by his happy pon Sir

fcrup.

ould be ane be-

ing

Whenever you leave him, answered he, it will be to his regret; it may therefore as well be soon: But I am forry, methinks, that he, who has qualities which endear him to every one, should be so much alone as he is here. I have a great desire, when I can be so happy as to find myself a settled man, to draw into my neighbourhood friends who will dignify it. Mr Deane will, hope, be often our visiter at the hall. The love he bears to his dear god-daughter will be his inducement; and the air and soil being more dry and wholesome than this so near the sens, may be a means to prolong his valuable life.

Dr Bartlett, continued he, has already carried into execution fome schemes which relate to my indigent neighbours, and the lower class of my tenants. How does that excellent man revere Miss Byron!—My Beauchamp, with our two fifters and their lords, will be often with us. Your worthy cousins Reeves, Lord W. and his deserving lady, will also be our visiters, and we theirs, in turn. The Mansfield fam'ly are already within a few miles of me: And our Northamptonshire friends! -Vifiters and vifited-What happiness do I propose to myself and the beloved of my heart!—And if (as you have generously wished) the dear Clementina may be happy, at least not unhappy, and her brother Jeronymo recover, what, in this world, can be wanting to crown our felicity?

Tears of joy strayed down my cheek, unperceived by me, till they fell upon his hand, as it had mine in it. He kissed them away. I was abashed. If my dear Miss Byron permit me to go on,

I have

I have her advice to ask.—I bowed my assent. My heart throbbed with painful joy: I could not fpeak.

Will it not be too early, madam, to ask you about fome matters of domestic concern? The lease of the house in St James's-square is expired. Some difficulties are made to renew it, unless on terms which I think unreasonable. I do not easily submit to imposition. Is there any thing that you particularly like in the situation of that house?

Houses, Sir, nay, countries, will be alike to me, in the company of those I value.

You are all goodness, madam. I will leave it to my sisters to enquire after another house. I hope you will allow them to consult you as any one may offer. I will write to the owner of my present house (who is solicitous to know my determination, and says he has a tenant ready if I relinquish it) that it will be at his command in three months time. When my dear Miss Byron shall bless me with her hand, and our Northampton-shire friends will part with her, if she pleases, we will go directly to the hall.

I bowed, and intended to look as one who thought herfelf obliged.

Restrain, check me, madam, whenever I seem to trespass on your goodness. Yet how shall I forbear to wish you to hasten the day that shall make you wholly mine?—You will the rather allow me to wish it, as you will then be more than ever your own mistress; though you have always been generously left to a discretion that never was more defervedly trusted to. Your will, madam, will ever comprehend mine.

You leave me, Sir, only room to fay, that if gratitude can make me a merit with you, that began with the first knowledge I had of you: and it has been increasing ever since—I hope I never shall be ungrateful.

Tears

I we D arms if re mira must happy bound gain faid h

in?] fast—fast!— Withd
dearest pulses ment, reveali

Juff

He with an Lucy, or ayed pedful of incred that iour to who has no that necessary if of a collection of the format.

I HAV

t

t

of

ne

as

bou

ne,

it

I

iny

my er-

re-

ree

hall

ton-

we

who m to

for-

make

w me

your gene-

re dell ever

that if

and it never

Tears

Tears again strayed down my cheek. Why did

Delicate fensibility! faid he. He clasped his arms about me—But instantly withdrew them, as if recollecting himself—Pardon me, madam! Admiration will sometimes mingle with reverence. I must express my gratitude as a man—May my happy day be not far distant, that I may have no bound to my joy!—He took my hand, and again pressed it with his lips. My heart, madam, said he, is in your hand: You cannot but treat it graciously.

Just then came in my Nancy [Why came she in?] with the general expectation of us to breakfast—Breakfast!—What, thought I, is breakfast!—The werld, my Charlotte!—But hush!—Withdraw, fond heart, from my pen! Can the dearest friend allow for the acknowledgment of impulses so fervent, and which, writing to the moment, as I may say, the moment only can justify revealing?

He led me down stairs, and to my very seat, with an air so noble, yet so tender—My aunt, my Lucy, every body——looked at me. My eyes be-trayed my hardly conquered emotion.

Sir Charles's looks and behaviour were so repectful that every one addressed me as a person of increased consequence. Do you think, Lady G. that Lord G.'s and Lord L.'s respectful behaiour to their wives do not as much credit to their wn hearts as to their ladies? How happy are ou that you have recollected yourself, and now incourage not others, by your example, to make a lest of a husband's love!—Will you forgive me the ecollection, for the sake of the joy I have in the eformation?——

I have read this letter, just now, to my aunt ad Lucy, all except this last faucy hint to you. Vol. VII.

They clasped me each in their arms, and said, they admired him, and were pleased with me. In struct me, my dear ladies, how to behave in such a manner, as may shew my gratitude (I had almost said my love); yet not go so very far, as to leave the day, the hour, every thing to his determination!

But, on reading to my aunt and Lucy what I had written, I was ashamed to find, that when he was enumerating the friends he hoped to have near him, or about him, I had forgot to remind him of my Emily. Ungrateful Harriet!-But don't tell her that I was so absorbed in self, and that the conversation was so interesting, that my heart was more of a passive than an active machine at the time. I will foon find, or make, an occasion to be her folicitress. You once thought that Emily, for her own fake, should not live with us; but her heart is fet upon it. Dear creature! I love her! I will foothe her! I will take her to my bosom!—I will, by my fifterly compassion, intitle myself to all her confidence: She shall have all mine. Nor shall her guardian suspect her .-I will be as faithful to her fecret, as you and Lad I. were (thankfully I remember it!) to mine Do you think, my dear, that if Lady Clementing I bow to her merit whenever I name her to my felf] had had fuch a true, fuch a foothing friend to whom the could have revealed the fecret that oppressed her noble heart, while her passion wa young, it would have been attended with fuch deprivation of her reason, as made unhappy all wh had the honour of being related to her?

O MY dear Lady G.! I am undone! Emily undone! We are all undone!—I am afraid fo!—My intolerable carelessiness!—I will run aw from him! I cannot look him in the face!—BI am most, most of all, concerned for my Emily Walks that just I may fata stoo Swe with Such face man my s

will

man

dear

I W fing-refeemed hope, i My me; g Was to na

world

Walking in the garden with Lucy, I dropt the last sheet, marked 6, of this letter *.

I missed it not till my aunt this minute told me, that Sir Charles, croffing the walk which I had just before quitted, stopped, and took up a paper. Immediately my heart milgave me. I took out my letter: I thought I had it all-But the fatal, tatal fixth sheet is wanting: That must be what he stooped for, and took up. What shall I do !--Sweet Emily! now will I never fuffer you to live with him. All my own heart laid open too!-Such prattling also !- I cannot look him in the face !- How thall I do, to get away to Shirleymanor, and hide myfelf in the indulgent bosom of my grandmamma !- What affectation, after this, will it be, to refule him his day !- But he demands audience of me. Could any thing (O the dear Emily!) have happened more mortifying to Your HARRIET BYRON!

LETTER VIII.

Miss Byron. In Continuation.

Friday Afternoon, October 20.

I WAS all confusion, when he, looking as unconscious as he used to do, entered my dressing-room. I turned my face from him. He seemed surprised at my concern. Miss Byron, I hope, is well. Has any thing disturbed you, madam?

My paper, my paper! You took it up—For the world I would not—The poor Emily!—Give it me; give it me; and I bursted into tears.—

Was there ever fuch a fool? What business had to name Emily?

G 2 He faid, Inuch a almost leave mina-what I hen he have remind —But f, and hat my we manke, an hought we with eature!

her.—
d Lady
o mine menting t to my g friend gret tha fion wa h fuch

Emily in aware !—Bi Emily Walkin

y all whi

[·] Beginning, Why did I weep? P. 73.

He took it out of his pocket. I came to give it to you; putting it into my hand. I faw it was your writing, madam: I folded it up immediately: It has not been unfolded fince: Not a fingle sentence did I permit myfelf to read.

Are you fure, Sir, you have not read it; nor any part of it?

Upon my honour I have not.

I cleared up at once. A bleffed reward, thought I, for denying my own curiofity, when preffed by my Charlotte to read a letter clandellinely obtained!

A thousand, thousand thanks to you, Sir, for not giving way to your curiofity. I should have been miscrable, perhaps, for months, had you read that paper.

You now indeed raise my curiosity, madam. Perhaps your generosity will permit you to gratify it; though I should not have forgiven myself, had I taken advantage of such an accident.

I will tell you the contents of some parts of it,

Sir.

Those which relate to my Emily, if you please, madam. The poor Emily, you said.—You have alarmed me. Perhaps I am not to be quite happy!—What of poor Emily! Has the girl been imprudent?—Has she already—What of the poor Emily?

And his face glowed with impatience.

No harm, Sir, of Emily!—Only a request of the dear girl! [What better use could I have made of my fright, Lady G.?] But the manner of my mentioning it, I would not for the world you should have seen.

No harm, you fay !—I was afraid, by your concern for her—But can you love her, as well as ever ?—If you can, Emily must still be good.

I can. I do.

Wha

poor

que

her

her

ther

man

teacl

Emi

SI

W

T

A

right

Itruct

time

than youn

I le be alv

Ob

over.

is oft heart.

You 1

a lette

- The

In I bo

He

only t

· have you.

Tell

A

I

J

e it

was ate-igle nor ught

effed

, for

have read

dam.

grati-

ryfelf,

of it,

please,

e hap-

been ie pour

uest of

I have

ld you

ni, cou-

well as

d.

What then, dear madam, of poor Emily? Why

I will tell you. The dear girl makes it her request, that I will procure of you one favour for her: Her heart is set upon it.

If Emily continue good, the shall only fignify her wish, and I will comply. If I am not a father to her, is the not fatherless?

Allow me, Sir, to call you kind! good! hu-

What I want of those qualities, Miss Byron will teach me, by her example—But what would my Emily?——

She would live with her guardian, Sir— With me, madam?—And with you, madam?— Tell me, own to me, madam, and with you?

And does my beloved Miss Byron think it a right wish to be granted? Will she be the instructing friend, the exemplary fister, now in that time of the dear girl's life, when the eye, rather than the judgment, is usually the director of a young woman's affections?

I love the fweet innocent: I could wish her to be always with me.

Obliging goodness! Then is one of my cares, over. A young woman, from fourteen to twenty, is often a troublesome charge upon a friendly heart. I could not have asked this favour of you. You rejoice me by mentioning it. Shall I write a letter, in your name, to Emily?

· There, Sir, are pen, ink, and paper.

In your name, madam?

I bowed affent ; mistrusting nothing.

He wrote; and doubling down, shewed me only these words—" My dear Miss Jervois, I have obtained for you the desired savour—Will you not continue to be as good as you have his

Wha G 3 • thert

therto been? That is all which is required of my Emily, by her ever affectionate

I instantly wrote, " Harriet Byron." -- But,

Sir, what have you doubled down?

Charming confidence!—What must he be, who could attempt to abuse it?—Read, madam, what you have figned.

I did. How my heart throbbed.—And could Sir Charles Grandison, said I, thus intend to deceive? Could Sir Charles Grandison be such a plotter? Thank God you are not a bad man.

After the words, I have obtained for you the defired favour, followed these:

"You must be very good. You must resolve to give me nothing but joy; joy equal to the love

I have for you, and to the facrifice I have made to oblige you. Go down, my love, as foon as you can, to Grandison-hall: I shall then have one of the fifters of my heart there to receive me. If you are there in less than a fortnight,

I will endeavour to be with you in a fortnight after. I facrifice, at least, another fortnight's punctilio to oblige you. And will you not continue to be as good as you have hitherto been?

That is all which is required of my Emily, by, &c.

Give me the paper, Sir; holding out my hand for it.

Have I forfeited my character with you, madam?—holding it back, with an air of respectful gaiety.

I must consider, Sir, before I give you an an-twer.

If I have, why should I not send it away; and, as Miss Byron cannot deny her hand-writing, hope to receive the benefit of the supposed deceit? Especially as it will answer so many good ends: For instance, your own wishes in Emily's rayour;

po tic the us ret litt

tell

par

the frie

and

-1

2 li

n

i

wer my way give faid dear hand her tion oug you, was jest; mean

S

as it will increase your own power of obliging; and be a means of accelerating the happiness of a man, whose principal joy will be in making you happy.

l of

But,

who

am,

could

de-

plot-

de.

ve to love

made

on as

have eceive

night,

night

ight's

t con-

been?

Emily,

hand

, ma-

pectful

an an-

; and,

vriting,

deceit!

ends:

avour;

25

Was it not a pretty piece of deceit, Lady G.? Shall I own, that my heart was more inclined to reward than punish him for it? And really, for a moment, I thought of the impracticableness of complying with the request, as if I was feriously pondering upon it, and was forry it was not prac-To get away from my dear Mr Deane, ticable. thought I, who will not be in hafte to part with us; some semale buftlings to be got over on our return to Selby house; proposal renewed, and a little paraded with [why, Lady Lady G. did you tell me that your fex is a foolith fex?]; the preparation; the ceremony; the awful ceremony! the parting with the dearest and most indulgent friends that every young creature was blefied with; and to be at Grandison-hall, all within one month ! -Was there ever so precipitating a man?

I believe verily, that I appeared to him as if I were confidering of it; for he took advantage of my filence, and urged me to permit him to fend away to Emily what he had written; and offered to give reasons for his urgency: Written as it is, said he, by me, and signed by you, how will the dear girl rejoice at the consent of both, under our hands! And will she not take the caution given her in it from me, as kindly as she will your mediation in her favour?

Sure, Sir, faid I, you expect not a ferious answer!—Upon his honour, he did—How, Sir! Ought you not rather to be thankful, if I forgive you, for letting me fee that Sir Charles Grandison was capable of such an artisce, though but in a jest; and for his reslection upon me, and perhaps meant on our sex, as if decorum were but puntilio?

I beg

I beg my Lucy's pardon, added I, for being half angry with her when the called you a defigner.

My dearest creature, said he, I am a designer. Who, to accelerate a happiness on which that of his whole life depends, would not be innocently so? I am, in this instance, selfish: But I glory in my selfishness; because I am determined, if power be lent me, that every one, within the circle of our acquaintance, shall have reason to congratulate you as one of the happiest of women.

Till this artifice, Sir, shewed me what you could do, were you not a man of the strictest honour, I had nothing but assance in you. Give me the paper, Sir; and, for your own sake, I will destroy it, that it may not furnish me with an argument, that there is not one man in the world who is to be implicitly confided in by a woman.

Take it, madam (prefenting it to me, with his usual gracefulness); destroy it not, however, till you have exposed me as fuch a breach of confidence deserves, to your aunt, your Lucy—to your uncle

Selby: and Mr Deane, if you please.

Ah, Sir! you know your advantages! I will not, in this case, refer to them: I could sooner rely, dearly as they love their Harriet, on Sir Charles Grandison's justice, than on their savour, in any debate that should happen between him and me.

There never, madam, except in the case before us, can be room for a reference: Your prudence and my gratitude must secure us both. Even now, impatient as I am to call you mine, which makes me willing to lay hold of every opportunity to urge you for an early day, I will endeavour to subdue that impatience, and submit to your will. Yet, let me say, that if I did not think your heart one of the most laudably unreserved, yet truly delicate, that women ever boasted, and your prudence equal, you would not have sound me so acquies ent

di m

to me de

the but the not write

. .

wiff gra hea hea any that men noce whice atter with of m Confe next.

quarl

tion

eent a lover, early as you suppose my urgency for the happy day.

And is it not early, Sir? Can Sir Charles Grandison think me punctilious?—But you will permit me to write to Miss Jervois myself, and acquaint her with her granted wish, if—

If! No if, madam—Whatever you think right to be done in this case, that do. Emily will be more particularly your ward than mine, if you condescend to take the trust upon you.

You will be pleased, dear Lady G. to acquaint Emily with the grant of her wish: She will rejoice. God give the dear creature reason for joy; and then I shall have double pleasure in having contributed to her obtaining of it. But, on second thoughts, I will write to her myself: for I allow not that she shall see or hear read every thing I write to you.

Shall I own to you, that my grandmamma, and aunt, and Lucy, are of your mind? They all three wish-But who can deny the dear innocent the grant of a request on which she has so long set her heart? And would it not be a pity, methinks I hear the world fay, some time hence, especially if any mishap (God forbid it!) should befal her, that Sir Charles Grandison, the most honourable of men, should so marry, as that a young lady of innocence and merit, and mistress of a fortune, which, it might be foreseen, would encourage the attempts of defigning men, could not have lived with his wife !- Poor child !- Then would the roorld have shaken its wife head (allow the expresfion); and well for me if it had judged fo mildly of me.

Our dear Mr Deane, though reluctantly, has confented that we shall leave him on Monday next. We shall set out directly for Selby-house, where we propose to be the same night. My aunt

and alf er.

of fo? my be our late

the troy

his till ence

will

ar retarles any me. before dence Even which tunity our to re will. heart y deliadence cquiescent and I have been urgent with him to go back with us; but he is crofs, and will be excused.

Just now Lucy tells me, that Mr Deane declared to my uncle, aunt, and her, that he will not visit us at Selby-house till we fend for him and the settlements together, which he will have ready in a week—Strange expedition! Sure they are afraid your brother will change his mind, and are willing to put it out of the poor man's power to recede! Lucy smiles at me, and is sure, the says, that she may in considence reveal all these matters to me, without endangering my life. My next letter will be from Selby-house.

While that life continues, my dear ladies, look upon me as affuredly

Yours, HARRIET BYRON.

LETTER IX.

Lady G. To Miss BYRON.

Monday, Oct. 23. O on, go on, with your narrative, my dear. I Hitherto Caroline and I know not how either much to blame you, or totally to acquit you of parade, the man and his fituation confidered; and the state of your heart for fo many months palt; every one of your friends-confenting, shall I fay ?-more than confenting-ardent to be related to him. Hark ye, Harriet, let me whisper you -My brother, whether he come honeftly, or not, by his knowledge, I dare fay, thinks not fo highly of the Free-masonry part of marriage as you do! -You ftart! O Charlotte! you cry:-And, 0 Harriet! too-But, my dear girl, let my brother fee, that you think (and no woman in the world does, if you don't) that the true modesty, after hearts ferrie that I wo fay wo thin poi

he ar

W

who the do Mrs ask that ang ftab.

len

he is matter pect alway ask is they father must in the most you not he Upon neither that the polite hearts are engaged, is to think little of parade, and much of the focial happiness that awaits two worthy minds united by love, and conformity of sentiment—After all, we are filly creatures, Harriet: We are afraid of wise men. No wonder that we seldom chuse them, when a sool offers. I wish I knew the man, however, who dared to fay this in my hearing.

Your grandmother Shirley is more than woman: My brother prodigiously admires her. I think you may trust to her judgment, if you suppose him too precipitating. Your aunt is an excellent woman: But I never knew a woman or man, who valued themselves on delicacy, and found themselves consulted upon it, but was apt to overdo the matter. Is not this a little, a very little, Mrs Selby's case? Let her know, that I bid you ask this question of herself: She must be assured that I equally love and honour her; so won't be angry.

Your uncle is an odd, but a very honest Dun-stable foul! Tell him, I say so; but withal, that he should leave women to act as a vomen in these matters. What a duce, what a pize, would he expect perfection from them? He, whose arguments always run in the depreciating strain? If he would, ask him, where should they have it, conversing, as they are obliged to do, with men? Men for their sathers, for their brothers, for their uncles—They must be a little silly, had they not a fund of silliness in themselves.—But I would not have them be most out, in matters where they should be most in.

I think, however, so does Lady L. that so far as you have proceeded, you are tolerable; though not half so clever as he, considering situations. Upon my word, Harriet, allowing for every thing, neither of Sir Charles Grandison's sisters expected that their brother would have made so ardent, so polite, a lover. He is so prudent a man, and that once

dear. how t you ered;
onths
, shall relater you r not, highly u do! nd, 0 prother world

hearts

. 23.

d

it

t.

id

og

e!

he

ne,

cill

ook

ON.

once had like to have been one of your, even your objections.—Yet so nobly sincere—so manly. O that my ape—But come, Harriet, as men go in this age of monkeys and Sir Foplings, Lord G. (for all you) is not to be despised. I, as a good wife ought, will take his part, whoever runs him down. Where much is not given, much, and so forth—

I have told Emily the good news: I could not help it, though you promife to write to her.

towards Beauchamp's house.

Poor thing! she is all exstasy! She is not the only one who seeks, as her greatest good, what may possibly prove her greatest missortune. But, for her sake, for your sake, and my brother's, I hope, under your directing eye, and by prudent management (the slame so young), a little cold water will do; and that if it will blaze, it may be directed

Let me whisper you again, Harriet-Young girls, finding themselves vested with new powers, and a fet of new inclinations, turn their staring eyes out of themselves; and the first man they see, they imagine, if he be a fingle man, and but fimpers at them, they must receive him as a lover: Then they return downcast for ogle, that he may ogle on without interruption. They are foon brought to write answers to letters which confess flames the writer's heart never felt. The girl doubts not her own gifts, her own confequence: She wonders that her father, mother, and other friends, never told her of these new-found excellencies: She is more and more beautiful in her own eyes, as he more and more flatters her. If her parents are a-verse, the girl is per-verse; and the more, the lefs discretion there is in her passion. She adopts the word constancy; she declaims against persecution; she calls her idle flame Love; a cupidity, which only was a fomething the knew not what to make of, -and, like a wandering bee, had begine gidd fusion lies, attain and the g

it 1

wer

well will be act.
There heart.
the we out lo

For too ma He m with h heart's odd for ter deli as to a he wo irst: I Harriet he othe nuch be can ther man is who is I Harriet polish o what's l it not settled on this flower, would on the next, were it either bitter or sweet.

VOL.

And this generally, with the thoughtless, is the beginning and progress of that formidable invader, mitcalled love; a word very happily at hand to help giddy creatures to talk with, and look without confusion of face on a man telling them a thousand lies, and hoping, perhaps by illaudable means, to attain an end not in itself illaudable, when duty and discretion are, the one the guide, the other the gentle restraint.

d

n

0 ot

ly

ay

for pe,

will

ung

ers,

ring

fee, fim-

ver:

may foon

nfess

girl

ence:

other

excel-

n her

r. If

; and

affion.

against a cu-

w not e, had

it

But as to Emily—I depend on her principles, as well as on your affectionate discretion (when you will be pleased among ye to permit my brother to be actually yours) for restraining her imagination. There never beat in semale bosom an honester heart. Poor thing! she is but a girl! and who is the woman or child that looks on my brother without love and reverence?

For Emily's fake, you fee, you must not have too many of your honest uncle's circum-roundabouts. He makes us laugh. I love to have him angry with his Dame Selby. Dear Harriet, when your heart's quite at ease, give us the courtship of the odd foul to the light of his eyes; his oddness, and ter delicacy! A charming contrast! You did help as to a little of it once *, you know. Theirs, on the woman's fide, could not be a match of love at irst: But who so happy as they? I am convinced, Harriet, that love on one fide, and discretion on the other, is enough in conscience, and, in short, much better than love on both: For what room can there be for difcretion in the latter case? The man is guilty of a heterodoxy in love you know, who is prudent, or but suspected of being so !-Ah farriet, Harriet, once more I fay, we women are bolish creatures in our love-affairs, and know not hat's best for ourselves .- In your stile-" Don't VOL. VII.

' you think fo, Lucy?"-Yet I admire Lucy-She got over an improperly-placed love; and now, her mad fit over [we have all little or much of it. tegun as I told you how], she is so cool, so quiet, fo fedate-Yet once I make no doubt, looking for. ward to her present happy quiescence, would have thought it a state of intipidity. Dearly do we love racketing; and another whisper some of us to be racketed—But not you! you are an exception. Yes, to be fure!—But I believe you'll think me mad.

We like my brother's little trick upon you in the billet he wrote, and which you figned, as if to E. mily. You fee how earnest he is, my dear. I long for his next letters from Italy. I think that is a lucky plea enough for you, suppose parade necesfary.

We have got Everard among us again. The forry fellow-O Harriet, had you feen him with his hat upon his two thumbs, bowing, cringing, blushing, confounded when first he came into my royal presence. But I, from my throne, extended the golden scepter to him, as I knew I should please my brother by it. He sat down when I bid him, twifted his lips, curdled his chin, hemm'd, stole a look of reverence at me, looked down when his eyes met mine; mine bold as innocence, his confcious as guilt; hemm'd again, turned his hat about, then with one of his not quite forgotten airs of pertnefs, putting it under his arm, shoot his ears, tried to look up; then his eye funk again under my broader eyes-O my dear, what a paltry creature is a man vice-bitten, and fensible of detected folly and obligation!

Sir Charles has made a man of him once more His dress is as gay as ever, and, I dare fay, he struts as much in it as ever, in company that know not how he came by it. He reformed !- Bad ha bits are of the Jerufalem-artichoke kind; one planted

plan gro He · to nize act ' fpec at 1 neve fom in t > D cate with Som be fi Ever py.

> > I

dear

very follie youn it no times hasa of th relict and c her d as it with

Th befor believ ner g cy-

now,

of it,

quiet,

g for-

have

e love

to be ption.

k me

in the

to E.

I long

t is a necel-

1 with

nging,

to my tended n I bid

emm'd,

n when ace, his his hat

rgotten

, thook

k agan

it a pal-

tible of e more

fay, h it know

Bad ha

; onc

planted

The

planted, there is no getting them out of the ground.

Our good Dr Bartlett is also ith us at present: He is in hopes of seeing my brother in town—" In 'town," Harriet!—and the great affair unsolemnized!—Woe be to you, if—But let's see how you ast when left to yourself. Prudent people in others' matters, are not always prudent in their own, especially in their love-affairs. A little over-nicety at setting out will carry them into a road they never intended to amble in; and then they are sometimes obliged to the less prudent to put them in the path they set out from. Remember, my dear, I am at hand if you bewilder yourself.

Dr Bartlett tells us, that my brother has extricated this poor creature from his entanglements with his woman, by his interpolition only by letter: Some money, I suppose. The Doctor defires to be silent on the means, but hints; however, that Everard will soon be in circumstances not unhappy.

I HAVE got the Doctor to explain himself. Every day produces some new instances of women's sollies. What would poor battered rakes and younger brothers do when on their last legs, were it not for good-natured widows—Ay, and sometimes for forward maids? This wretch, it seems, has acquitted himself so handsomely in the discharge of the 100 l. which he owed to his wine-merchant's relict, and the lady was so full of ackowledgments and obligations, and all that, for being paid but her due, that he has ventured to make love to her, as it is called, and is well received. He behaves with more spirit before me.

The widow had a plain, diligent, honest man before. She has what is called taste, for footh, or believes she has. She thinks Mr Grandison a finer gentleman than him who left her in a condition to be thought worthy of the address of a gayer man. She prides herself, it seems, in the relation that her marriage will give her to a man of Sir Charles Grandison's character. Much worse reasons will have weight, when a woman finds herself inclined to change her condition. But Everard is very earnest that my brother should know nothing of the matter till all is over: So you (as I) have this piece of news in considence. Lady Inhas not been told it. His cousin, he says, who resused him his interest with Miss Manssield, Lady W.'s sider, because he thought a further time of probation, with regard to his avowed good resolutions, necessary, would perhaps, for the widow's sake, if applied to, put a spoke in his wheel.

Everard (I can hardly allow myfelf to call him Grandison) avows a vehement passion for the widow. She is rich.—When they are set out together in tasse, as she calls it, trade, or business, her first rise quite forgot, what a gay, what a frost dance will the and her new husband, in a little while, lead up on the grave of her poor, plain, despised one!

'Tis well, 'tis well, my dear Harriet, that I have a multitude of faults myself [witness, to go no further back, this letter], or I should despite nine parts of the world out of ten.

I find that Sir Charles, and Beauchamp, and Dr Bartlett correspond. Light is hardly more active than my brother, nor lightning more quick, when he has any thing to execute that must or ought to be done. I believe I told you early, that was a part of his character. You must not then wonder or be offended [Shall I use the word offended, my dear?] that you, in your turn, now he has found himself at liberty to address you, should be affected by his adroitness and vivacity in your femalities, as uncle Selby calls them: Aptly enough I think, though I do not love that men should be so impudent im out too frei one Cou as h you over vaw riet bout you you got pellin like, fore, the an o his fi expai rons nity; Whe very of th remen those who l est plu es cro or two

He suppose body, He ter on and fh

impudent as either to abuse us, or even to find us out. You cannot always, were you to think him too precipitating, feparate difagrecable qualities from good in the fame person, since, perhaps, the one is the constitutional occasion of the other. Could he, for example, be half fo useful a friend as he is, if he were to dream over a love-affair, as you would feem to have him; in other words, gape over his ripened fruit till it dropt into his yawyaw-yawning mouth? He'll certainly get you Harriet within, or near his proposed time. Look about you: He'll have you before you know where you are. By hook, as the faying is, will he pull you to him, struggle as you will (he has already got hold of you), or by crook, inviting, nay, compelling you, by his generofity, gentle shepherdlike, to nymph as gentle. What you do, therefore, do with fuch a grace as may preferve to you the appearance of having it in your power to lay an obligation upon him. It is the opinion of both his fifters, that he values you more for your noble expansion of heart, and not ignorant, but generous frankness of manners, yet mingled with dignity; than for-even your beauty, Harriet-Whether you, who are in fuch full possession of every grace of person, care, as a woman, to hear of that or not. His gay parterre fimilitude you remember, my dear. It is my firm belief, that those are the greatest admirers of fine flowers, who love to fee them in their borders, and feldomest pluck the fading fragrance. The other wretches crop, put them in their bosoms, and in an hour

He is very bufy wherever he is. At his inn, I suppose, most. But he boasts not to you, or any-or two, rose, carnation, or whatever they be, after one parting fmell, throw them away.

body, of what he does.

He writes now and then a letter to aunt Nell, and she is so proud of the favour-Look you here,

H 3

go no le nine o, and more quick, nuit or y, that t then d offenow he fhould n your enough ld be fo pudent ayer

ation

f Sir

rea-

her-

L.ve-

know as I)

ly L.

who

La.

time

od re-

dow's

1 him

ne wi-

toge-

s, her frolic

a little plain,

I have

niece; look you here !- But I shan't shew you all he writes. On go the spectacles -for she will not for the world part with the letter out of her hands. She reads one paragraph, one fentence, then ano. ther. On and off go the spectacles, while she conjectures, explains, animadverts, applauds; and fo goes on till the leaves not a line unread: Then folding it up carefully in its cover, puts it in her letter or ribband-cafe, which shall I call it? For having but few letters to put in it, the case is filled with bits and ends of ribbands, patterns, and fo forth, of all manner of colours, faded and fresh, with intermingledoms of goldbeaters skin, plaisters for a cut finger, for a chapt lip, a kibe, perhaps for corns, which the difpenses occasionally very bountifully, and values herfelf (as we see at such times by a double chin made triple) for being not unuseful in her generation. Chide me, if you will; the humour's upon me; hang me if I care: You are only Harriet Byron as yet. Change your name, and increase your consequence.

I have written a long letter already; and to what end? only to expose myself, say you? True enough. But now, Harriet, to bribe you into passing a milder censure, let me tell you all I can pick up from the doctor relating to my brother's matters. Bribe shall I call this, or gratitude for your free communications?

Matters between the Mansfields and the Keelings are brought very forward. Hang particulars: Nobody's affairs lie near my heart but yours. The two families have already begun to visit. When my brother returns, all the gentry in the neighbourhood are to be invited, to rejoice with the parties on the occasion.

Be so kind, my dear, as to dismiss the good man as soon as your punctilio will admit. We are contented, that while he lays himself out so much in the service of others, he should do some thing

al

ne

fh

ly

fo

an

re

of

Po

be

R.C.

thing for himself. You, my dear, we look upon as a high reward for his many great and good actions. But, as he is a man who has a deep sense of favours granted, and values not the blessing the more (when it ought to be within his reach) because it is dear, as is the case of the forry sellows in general, I would have you consider of it—that's all.

The doctor tells me also, that the wicked Bolton's ward is dead, and that every thing is concluded to Sir Charles's satisfaction with him, and the Mansfields (reinstated in all their rights) are once more a happy family.

Sir Hargrave is in a lamentable way: Dr Bartlett has great compassion for him. Would you have me pity him, Harriet?—You would, you say —Well then I'll try for it. As it was by his means you and we, and my brother, came acquainted, I think I may. He is to be brought to town.

Poor Sir Harry Beauchamp! He is past recovery. Had the physicians given him over when they first undertook him, he might, they say, have had a chance for it.

I told you that Emily's mother was turned Methodift. She has converted her hufband. A strange alteration! But it is natural for fuch fort of people to pass from one extreme to another. Emily every now and then vifits them. They are ready to worship her for her duty and goodness. She is a lovely girl: She every day improves in her person, as well as in her mind. She is fometimes with me, fometimes with Lady L. fometimes with aunt Eleanor, fometimes with your Mrs Reeves-We are ready to fight for her: But you will foon rob all of us. She is preparing for her journey to you. Poor girl! I pity her. Such a conflict in her mind between her love of you and tenderness for her guardian: Her Anne has confessed to me, that she weeps one half of the night, yet forces herfelf to iculars: s. The When e neighwith the ou all

ot for lands.

ano.

e con-

and fo

Then in her

? For

s filled

and fo

trelh, laisters

erhaps

y very

at fuch ng not u will;

: You

e your

and to

? True

ou into

Il I can

rother's

ude for e Keel-

it. We fout fo fome.

thing

be lively in company-after the example of Miss Byron, the fays, when the vifited you at Selbyhouse. I hope, my dear, all will be right. But to go to live with a beloved object-I don't understand it. You, Harriet, may. I never was in love, God help me!

I am afraid the dear girl does too much for her As they have fo handsome an annuity, 400 l. a-year, fo much beyond their expectations, I think she should not give, nor should they receive any thing confiderable of her, without her guardian's knowledge. She is laying out a great deal of money in new cloaths, to do you and her guardian credit-on your nuptials, poor thing! the fays, with tears in her eyes—but whether of joy, or fensibility, it is hard to decide; but I believe of both.

What makes me imagine fhe does more than she fhould is, that a week ago she borrowed fifty guineas of me, and but yesterday came to me-I should do a very wrong thing, said she, blushing up to the ears, should I ask Lady L. to lend me a fum of money till my next quarter comes due, after I made myself your debior so lately: But if you could lend me thirty or forty guineas more, you would do me a great favour.

My dear! faid I; and stared at her.

Don't question, don't chide me this one time. I never will run in debt again: I hate to be in debt. But you have bid me tell you all my wants.

I will not, my love, fay another word.

fetch you fifty guineas more.

More, my dear Lady G.! that is a pretty rub: But I will always, for the future, be within bounds: And don't let my guardian know it-He will kill me by his generofity, yet perhaps in his own heart wonder what I did with my money. If he thought ill of me, or that I was extravagant, it would break my heart.

Only,

yea do

fift

dea thi the vaf

and

hat

gra

with to c mor row fhe's the whi riou as n was -S unfo -P way -11.

D State ftarin ture pityi vex (Only, my dear, faid I, remember that 400 l. ayear—Mrs O'Hara cannot want any thing to be done for her now.

Don't call her Mrs O'Hara! She is very good:

Call her my mother.

I kissed the sweet gir', and setched her the other fifty guineas.

I thought it not amiss to give you this hint, my dear, against she goes down to you. But do you think it right, after all, to have her with my brother and you?

Lady L. keeps close-She fasts, cries, prays, is vally apprehensive: She makes me uneasy for her and myfelf. These vile men! I believe I shall hate them all. Did they partake-But not half fo grateful as the blackbirds; they rather look big with infolence, than perch near, and fing a fong to comfort the poor fouls they have to grievously mortified. Other birds, as I have observed (sparrows in particular), fit hour and hour, he's and fhe's in turn; and I have feen the hen, when the rogue has staid too long, rattle at him, while he circles about her with sweeping wings, and displayed plumage, his head and breat of various dyes, ardently shining, Peep, peep, peep; as much as to fay, I beg your pardon, love—I was forced to go a great way off for my dinner. -Sirrr-rah! I have thought the has faid, in an unforgiving accent—Do your duty now—Sit close -Peep, peep, peep-I will, I will, I will-Away she has skimmed, and returned to relieve him -when she thought fit.

Don't laugh at us, Harriet, in our mortified flate—(Begone, wretch—What have I done, madam? flaring! What have you done!—My forry creature came in wheedling, courting, just as I was pitying two meek fifters: Was it not enough to vex one?)—Don't laugh at us, I fay—If you do?

-may

Only,

ty,

ifs

y-

ut

er-

in ive arleal

fhe oy,

fhe guiI sing me a aft if

you

ime. oe in ants. will rub:

nds:
kill neart ught
rould

-may my brother, all in good time, avenge us on you, prays in malice

CHARLOTTE G.

odi

ties

Fie

con

rad pro

thei fake

upo

· ca crec

wich

as it

For

thin

are i

as y

call

one:

own

coul

freed

I wi

great

But

throt two ( to th rect 1

fide,

fome

Be

Bi

LETTER X.

Miss BYRON, To Lady G.

Wedn. Evening, Oct. 25.

FIE upon you, Lady G.! What a letter have you written! There is no separating the good from the bad in it! With what dangerous talents are you entrusted! and what use do you make of them! I have written two long letters, continuing my narrative of our proceedings; but I must take you to severe task for this before me; and this and they shall go together!

Wicked wit! What a foe art thou to decent chearfulness!—In a woman's hand such a weapon! What might we not expect from it, were it in a man's? How you justify the very creatures of that fex, whom you would be thought to despite!

But you fay, you would not allow in a man the liberties you yourself take with your own sex. How can you, my dear, be so partial to your faults, yet own them to be such? Would you rank with the worst of sinners? They do just so.

I may be a fool: I may be inconfishent: I may not know how with a grace to give effect to my own wishes: I may be able to advise better than act—Most pragmatical creatures think they can be counsellors in another's case, while their own affairs, as my uncle would say, lie at sixes and sevens. But how does this excuse your fredoms with your whole sex—with the innocents of it more particularly?

Let

Let me fay, my dear, that you take odious, yes, dious liberties; I won't recall the word: Liberties which I cannot, though to shame you, repeat. Fie upon you Charlotte!

And yet you fay, that neither you nor Lady L. know how to blame me much, though, the man considered, you will not totally acquit me of parade; and in another place, that so far as we have proceeded, we have behaved tolerably. Why, then, all this riot?—yes, riot, Charlotte! against us, and against our fex! What, but for riot's fake?

"The humour upon you!"-The humour is upon you, with a witness! " Hang you, if you ' care!"-But, my dear, it would be more to your credit if you did care; and if you checked the wicked humour .- Do you think nobody but you has fuch talents? Fain would I lower you, fince, as it is evident, you take pride in your licence-Forgive me, my dear.—Yet I will not fay half I think of your wicked wit. Think you, that there are not many who could be as fmart, as furprifing, as you, were they to indulge a vein of what you call humour? Do you think your brother is not one? Would he not be too hard for you at your own weapons? Has he not convinced you that he could? But he, a man, can check the overflowing freedom.

But if I have fet out wrong with your brother, I will do my endeavour to recover my path. You greatly oblige me with your conducting hand: But what necessity was there for you to lead me through briars and thorns, and to plunge me into two or three dirty puddles, in order to put me into the right path, when it lay before you in a direct line, without going a bow-shot about?

Be pleased, however, to consider situation on my side, as well as on your brother's: I might be somewhat excuseable for my aukwardness, perhaps,

Let

us

25.

lave

the

rous

you

ters,

but fore

ecent pon!

in a

that

n the

lex.

your

rank

ay not

y own

in act

an be ffairs,

your parti-

But

were it considered that the notion of a double or divided love, on the man's part, came often into my head; indeed could not be long out; the lady fo fuperlatively excellent! his affection for her fo allowably, as well as avowedly strong! Was it possible to avoid little jealousies, little petulancies, when flights were imaginable? The more for the excellency of the man; the more for my past weakness of so many months? I pretend not, my dearest Charlotte, to be got above nature: I know I am a weak filly girl: I am humbled in the fense I have of his and Clementina's fuperior merits. True love will ever make a person think meanly of herfelf, in proportion as the thinks highly of the object. Pride will be up fometimes; but in the pull two ways, between that and mortification, a torn coat will be the consequence: And must not the tatterdemalion (what a new language will my uncle teach me!) then look simply?

You bid me alk my aunt-You bid me tell my uncle-Naughty Charlotte! I will ask, I will tell them nothing. Pray write me a letter next that I can read to them. I skipt this passage—Read that-'um-'um-'um-Then kipt again-Heyday! What's come to the girl? cried my uncle: Can Lady G. write what Harriet cannot read? [There was a rebuke for you, Charlotte!] For the love of God, let me read it :- He buftled, laughed, thook his thoulders, rubbed his hands, at the imagination—Some pretty roguery, I warrant: Dearly do I love Lady G. If you love me, Harriet, let me read; and once he fnatched one of the sheets. I boldly struggled with him for it-For thame, Mr Selby, faid my aunt. My dear, faid my grandmother, if your uncle is fo impetuous, you must shew him no more of your letters.

He a fine uncle,

wicke

-O

my fi howev

vours.

Poc

yet faguishi
—Eve
my E
—Yet
think can I how is as the this li were t fured
And

write ence w
better not of hope
wears was fo
lotte!
good [Were nouree and y loving

In

than o

He then gave it up—Consider, Charlotte, what a fine piece of work we should have had with my uncle, had he read it through!

or

my

y fo

al-

hen

cel-

reft ife I

rits. ly of

the

the

on, a not i my

my

l tell that Read

Hey-

ncle:

read?

r the ugh-

et the rant:

me,

ne of

it-

dear,

petu-

r let-

He

But, let me fee,—What are the parts of this wicked letter, for which I can fincerely thank you;

O my dear, I cannot, cannot, without foiling my fingers, pick them out—Your intelligences, however, are among those which I hold for favours.

Poor Emily! that is a fubject which delights, yet faddens me—We are laudably fond of distinguishing merit. But your brother's is so dazzling—Every woman is one's rival. But no more of my Emily! Dear creature! the subject pains me—Yet I cannot quit it.—You ask, if, after all, I think it right that she should live with me?—What can I say? For her sake, perhaps, it will not: Yet how is her heart set upon it! For my own sake, as there is no perfect happiness to be expected in this life, I could be content to bear a little pain, were that dear girl to be either benefited or pleafured by it. Indeed I love her at my heart—And what is more—I love myself for so sincerely loving her.

In the picked part of your letter, what you write of your aunt Eleanor—But I have no patience with you, finner as you are against light, and better knowledge! and derider of the infirmities, not of old maids, but of old age!—Don't you hope to live long yourself? That worthy lady wears not spectacles, Charlotte, because she never was so happy as to be married. Wicked Charlotte! to owe such obligation to the generosity of good Lord G. for taking pity of you in time [Were you sour or sive and twenty when he homoured you with his hand at St George's church?] and yet to treat him as you do, in more places than one, in this very letter!

Vol. VII. I But

But I will tell you what I will do with this fame strange letter-I will transcribe all the good things in it. There are many which both delight and instruct; and some morning, before I dress for the day, I will [Sad task, Charlotte! But it shall be by way of penance for some of my faults and follies!] transcribe the intolerable passages; fo make two letters of it. One I will keep to thew my friends here, in order to increase, if it be possible, their admiration of my Charlotte; the bad one I will prefent to you. I know I shall transcribe it in a violent hurry-Not much matter whether it be legible or not-The hobbling it will cause in the reading will make it appear worse to you, than if you could read it as glibly as you write. If half of it be illegible, enough will be left to make you blush for the whole, and wonder what fort of a pen it was that fomebody, unknown to you, put into your standish.

After all, spare me not, my ever-dear, my evercharming friend: spare only your-felf: Don't let Charlotte run away from both G.'s. You will then be always equally sure of my admiration and love. For dearly do I love you, with all your faults; so dearly, that when I consider your faults by themselves, I am ready to arraign my heart, and to think there is more of the roguery of my Charlotte in it than I will allow of.

One punishment to you, I intend, my dear—In all my future letters, I will write as if I had never feen this your naughty one. Indeed I am in a kind of way, faulty or not, that I cannot get out of all at once; but as foon as I can, I will, that I may better justify my displeasure at some parts of your letter, by the observance I will pay to others. That is a sweet sentence of my Charlotte's: "Change your name, and increase your consequence." Restect, my dear; how naughty nous must go

not to
I am
am? I to be themselve andou Charles

cufeabl

uet w

ning, 1

from, a

with us She

which Heiling WE

teil her

orme c

must you have been, that such a charming instance of goodness could not bribe to spare you.

Your ever affectionate and grateful HARRIET BYRON.

LETTER XI.

Mifs Byron. In Continuation.

Selby-house, Tuesday Morning, Oct. 24.

R Deane would not go back with us. He laid a strict charge upon me, at parting, not to be puncilious.

I am not, my dear Lady G. Do you think I am? The men are their own enemies, if they wish to be open-hearted and sincere, and are not so themselves. Let them enable us to depend on their tandour, as much as we may on that of Sir Charles Grandison, and the women will be inexcuseable, who shall play either the prude or the conjuct with them. You will say, I am very cunning, perhaps, to form at the same time a rule from, and an excuse for, my own conduct to this excellent man: But be that as it will, it is truth.

We fent our duty last night to Shirley-manor: and expect every moment the dear parent there with us.

She is come. I will go down; and if I get her by myself, or only with my aunt and Lucy, I will tell her a thousand thousand agreeable things, which have passed fince last I had her tender blessing.

We have had this Greville and this Fenwick here. I could very well have spared them. Miss orme came hither also, uninvited, to breakfast; a favour this good elight dress But it faults lages;

poffi-

tran-

matter it will orfe to us you will be wonder known

y everon't let ill then ad love. alts; for themand to Charear—In id never am in a get out

, that I
parts of o others,
rlotte's:
r confenaughty
muft

favour she often does us. I knew not, at first, how to behave to Sir Charles before her: She looked so jealous of him! so cold! Under her bent brow she looked at him: Yes, and No, were all her answers, with an air so stiff!—But this referve lasted not above a quarter of an hour. Sir Charles addressed himself to me with so much respect, to her, with so polite a freedom, that she could not hold her shyness.

Her brow cleared up; her eyes looked larger, and more free: Her buttoned-up pretty mouth opened to a smile: She answered, the asked questions; gave her required opinion on more topic than one, and was again all Mifs Orme.

Every body took great notice of Sir Charlest fine address to her, and were charmed with him for we all esteem Mr Orme, and love his sisten. How pleasant it was to see the funshine break on in her amiable countenance, and the gloom we nishing by degrees!

She took me out into the leffer parlour.—What a strange variable creature am I! said she: How I hated this Sir Charles Grandison, before I saw him! I was vexed to find him, at first sight, as swer what I had heard of him; for I was reserved to dislike him, though he had been an angel But, ah, my poor brother!—I am afraid, that myself shall be ready to give up his interest!—N wonder, my dear Miss Byron, that nobody would do, when you had seen this man!—But he let me bespeak your pity for my brother—Would to Heaven you had not gone to London!—Whe went you thither for?

Sir Charles kindly enquired of her after l Orme's health; praised him for his character wished his recovery; and to be allowed to cub vate the friendship of so worthy a man: And this with an air so sincere!—But good men m love one another.

that fonmor which tired fe'en twel

B

keep fore we c past why supported mons lieve circui be int dy Ci nough carry ble as 0

My Becau that is and he ment.

But making forwar

-As arrive could a

Six Charles has just now declared to my aunt, that he thinks of going up to town, or to Grandifon-hall, I forget if they told me which, to-morrow or next day: Perhaps he knows not to which himself. I was surprised. Perhaps he is tired with us. Let me recollect—Thursday was seen wight! Why indeed he has been down with us twelve days!—No less.

But he has no doubts, no suspences, from us, to keep love awake; his path is plain and smooth before him. He had demanded his day: We think we cannot immediately, and after so thort a time past since his declaring himself, give it him—And why should he lose his precious time among us? I suppose he will be so good as to hold himself in readiness to obey our summons—He expects a sum-o my dear Lady G.! am I not perverse? I believe I am. Yet where there is room, from past circumstances, to dread a slight, though none may be intended, and truly as I honour and revere Lady Clementina, my mind is not always great enough (perhaps from consciousness of demerit) to carry itself above apprehension and petulance, noble as is the man.

My uncle is a little down upon it; and why? Because, truly, my grandmamma has told him, that it is really too early yet to fix the day; and he reverences, as every-body does, her judgment.

But why, he asks, cannot there be preparation making! Why may not something be seen going forward?

What! before the day is named? my aunt asks.

—As Harriet had defired to have his next letters arrive before she directly answered the question, she could not recede.

I 3

He

after haracter to cult And

firft,

: She

r her

W'ere

is re-

h re-

at the larger,

mouth

d ques-

topic

narles

h him:

s filter.

eak ou

om va-

-What

: How

e I far

ht, an

is reid

angel

, that

ft!-N

ody el

But ill

-Wh

Sir

He went from them both greatly diffatisfied, and exclaiming against women's love of power, and never knowing how to make a right use of it.

A message from Sir Charles. He desires to attend me. I believe I shall be a little sullen: I know my heart: It is all his own; and I am loth to disoblige him—But he was far, far more attendant on Lady Clementina's motions: Don't you think so, Lady G.? But she was all excellence—Well—But hush!—I say no more!—

I will give you an account of our conversation. I verily believe, that had he not touched the poor snail with too hasty a finger, which made her shrink again into her shell, I might have been brought to name the week, though not the day.

But I will not anticipate.

He entered with a very polite and affectionate air. He enquired after my health, and faid, I looked not well-Only vexed, thought I!

It is impossible, I believe, to hold displeasure in the presence of a beloved object, with whom we are not mortally offended. My dearest Miss Byron, said he, taking my passive hand, I am come to ask your advice on twenty subjects. In the first place, here is a letter from Lady G. recommending to me a house near her own [He gave it me. I read it.] Should you, madam, approve of Grosvenor-square?

I was filent: You will guess how my captious folly appeared to him, by what he said to me. He respectfully took my hand—Why so solemn, dear madam? Why so silent? Has any thing disturbed you? Some little displeasure seems to hang upon that open countenance. Not at me, I hope?

Yet it is, thought I! But I did not intend you should see it.—I cleared up; and without answer-of I far to n his t ligh on py c writ may Sl

W

fettle arts. not. of n you you, think happ prefit were I sho fome pliar H

refs ceed You,

appr kens

ing

ing his question, faid, It is in the neighbourhood of Lady I. I hope?

Thank you madam, for that hope—It is. Nor far from your cousins Reeves.

I can have no objection, Sir.

I will refer myself, on this subject, if you please, to my sisters, and Lord G. He values himself on his taste in houses and furniture, and will be delighted to be put into commission with my sisters on this occasion: Or shall I stay till the happy day is over, and leave the choice wholly to yourself?

Lady G. Sir, feems pleafed with the house. She writes, that there is somebody else about it. It may not, then, be to be had.

Shall I, then, commission her to take it directly?

What you pleafe, Sir.

He bowed to me, and faid, Then that matter is fettled. And now, madam, let me own all my arts. You would penetrate into them, if I did not. You fee, that the great question is never out of my view—I cannot but hope and believe, that you are above regarding mere punctilio—Have you, my dearest Miss Byron, thought, can you think, of some early week, in which to fix my happy day!—Some preparation on your part, I presume, will be thought necessary: As to mine, were you to bless me with your hand next week, I should be aforehand in that particular.

I was filent. I was confidering how to find fome middle way that should make non-compliance appear neither disobliging nor affected.

He looked up at me with love and tenderness in his aspect; but, having no answer, proceeded:

Your uncle, madam, and Mr Deane, will inform you, that the fettlements are fuch as cannot be difapproved of. I expect every day fome flight to-kens of my affection for my dear Miss Byron, which

ed, ver, ufe

: I loth aton't nce

at-

ion. poor her

nate d, I

Bycome e first iding

Grofotious He

dear arbed upon

l you fwer-

CO

ve

ha

W

be

of,

m

to me

ce

no

m

on

w

to

ly

m an ha

ov

ca

the fu

ea

a

yo

ov

It

m ca

gr

I tic

VO

fr

which will be adorned by the lovely wearer: I have not been fo extravagant in them, as shall make her think I build on toys for her approbation. She will allow me to give her my notions on this subject. In the articles of personal appear. ance, I think, that propriety and degree should be confulted, as well as fortune. Our degree, our fortune, madam, is not mean; but I, who always wished for the revival of sumptuary laws, have not fought, in this article, to emulate princes. In my own drefs I am generally a conformift to the fashion. Singularity is usually the indication of fomething wrong in judgment. I rather perhaps dress too showy, though a young man, for one who builds nothing on outward appearance. But my father loved to be dreffed. In matters which regard not morals, I chuse to appear to his friends and tenants, as not doing difcredit to his magnificent spirit *. I could not think it becoming, as those perhaps do who have the direction of the royal stamp on the coin, to fet my face the contrary way to that of my predecessor. In a word, all my father's steps, in which I could tread, I did; and have chosen rather to build upon, than demolish, his foundations. But how does my vanity mislead me! I have vanity, madam; I have pride, and fome confequential failings, which I cannot always get above: But, anxious as I ever shall be for your approbation, my whole heart shall be open to you; and every motive, every fpring of action, fo far as I can trace it, be it to my advantage or not, shall be made known to you. Happy the day that I became acquainted with Dr Bartlett! He will tell you, madam, that I am corrigible.

^{*} Miss Byron observes, Vol. I. Let. xxxvi. that Sir Charles's dress and equipage are rather gay than plain. She little thought, at that time, that he had such a reason to give for it as he here suggests.

corrigible. You must perfect, by your sweet conversation, un-coupled with fear, what Dr Bartlett has so happily begun; and I shall then be more worthy of you than at present I am.

O, Sir, you do me too much honour! You must be my monitor. As to the ornaments you speak of, I hope I shall always look upon simplicity of manners, a grateful return to the man I shall vow to honour, and a worthy behaviour to all around me, as my principal ornaments!

: I

thall

oba-

ions

ear-

d be

our ways

not

my

the

1 of

haps

one

But

hich

his

o his om.

Rion

the.

rord,

id, I

than

s my

have ch I

neart

very

it to you.

Dr

am

ible.

that

than bad

His eyes gliftened. He bowed his face upon my hand, to hide, as I thought, his emotion. Excellent Miss Byron! faid he. Then, after a pause, now let me fay, that I have the happiness to find my humble application to you acceptable to every one of your friends. The only woman on earth, whom, befides yourfelf, I ever could have withed to call mine, and all her ever-to-be-respected family (pleading their own fakes), join their withes in my favour; and, were you to defire it, would, I am fure, fignify as much to you under their own hands. I know not whether I could fo far have overcome my own fcruples in behalf of your delicacy (placing myfelf, as persons always ought when they hope for favour, in the granter's place) as to supplicate you so soon as I have done, but at the earnest request of a family, and for the fake of a lady I must ever hold dear. The world about you expects a speedy celebration. I have not, I own, been backward to encourage the expectation: It was impossible to conceal from it the motive of my coming down, as my abode was at an inn. I came with an equipage, because my pride (How great is my pride!) permitted me not to own that I doubted. Have you, madam, a material objection to an early day? Be so good to inform me if you have. I wish to remove every shadow of doubt from your heart.

I was filent. He proceeded:

Let me not pain you, madam !-lifting my hand to his lips-I would not pain you for the world. You have feen the unhappy Olivia: You have perhaps heard her story from herfelf. What must be the cause upon which self-partiality cannot put a gloss? Because I knew not how (it was shocking to my nature) to repulse a lady, the took my pity for encouragement. Pity from a lady of a man is noble—The declaration of pity from a man for a woman, may be thought a vanity bordering upon infult. Of fuch a nature is not mine ---She has some noble qualities--From my heart, for her character's fake, I pity Olivia, and the more for that violence of temper which she never was taught to restrain. If, madam, you have any scruples on her account, own them: I will, for I honeftly can, remove them.

O Sir! None! None!-Not the least, on that unhappy lady's account-

Let me fay, proceeded he, that Olivia reveres you, and withes you (I hope cordially, for the is afraid still of your fitter-excellence) to be mine. Give me leave to boast (it is my boast), that tho' I have had pain from individuals of your fex, I can look back on my past life, and bless God that I never, from childhood to manhood, wilfully gave pain either to the MOTHERLY OF SISTERLY heart *; nor from manhood to the present hour, to any other woman.

O Sir! Sir!—What is it you call pain, if at this instant (and I said it with tears) that which your goodness makes me feel is not so?—The dear, the excellent Clementina! What a perverseness is in her sate! She, and the only, could have deserved you!

He bent his knee to the greatly-honoured Harriet-riet joy 211056 tina her! lenc been tion: dam ot fi of the cipal that me r mate prefe

O petul not fily you flatte Clem never pain for y my p done

I can
I t

to mi ipeak He

on you ther y

^{*} See his mother's written acknowledgment to this purpose, Vol. II. P. 221.

riet-I acknowledge with transport, faid he, the joy you give me by your magnanimity; fuch a more than fifterly magnanimity to that of Clementina. How nobly do you authorize my regard for her !- In you, madam, shall I have all her excellencies, without the abatements, which must have been allowed had the been mine, from confiderations of religion and country. Lelieve me, madam, that my love of her, if I know my heart, is of fuch a nature, as never can abate the fervour To both of you, my prinof that I vow to you. cipal attachment was to MIND: Yet let me fay, that the personal union, to which you discourage me not to aspire, and the duties of that most intimate of all connexions, will preferve to you the due preference, as (allow me to fay) it would have done to her, had the accepted of my vows.

O Sir! believe me incapable of affectation, of petulance, of difguise! My heart (why should I not speek freely to Sir Charles Grandison?) is wholly yours!——It never knew another lord! I will slatter myself, that, had you never known Lady Clementina, and had she not been a prior love, you never would have had a divided heart!—What pain must you have had in the conflict! My regard for you bids me acknowledge my own vanity in my pity for you?

I guthed into tears—You must leave me, Sir—I cannot bear the exaltation you have given me!

I turned away my face: I thought I thould have fainted.

He clasped me to his bosom: He put his cheek to mine: For a moment we neither of us could ipeak.

e

a

y

11

172

-

ne

V

d

ne

no

1

at res

is

ne.

, I

hat

*:

her

this

our

the

in ved

Tar-

:t-

this

He broke the short silence. I dread the effects on your tender health, of the pain that I, or rather your own greatness of mind gives you. Beloved of my heart! kissing my check, wet at that moment with the tears of both, forgive me!

And

And be affured, that reverence will always accompany my love. Will it be too much, just now, to re-urge the day that shall answer the wishes of Clementina, of her noble brothers, of all our own friends, and make you wholly mine?

His air was so noble, his eyes shewed so much awe, yet such manly dignity, that my heart gave way to its natural impulse—Why, Sir, should I not declare my reliance on your candour! My honour, in the world's eye, I entrust to you: But bid me not do an improper thing, lest my desire of obliging you should make me forget myself.

Was not this a generous refignation? Did it not deferve a generous return? But he, even Sir Charles Grandison, endeavoured to make his advantage of it, letters from Italy unreceived! as if he thought my reference to those a punctilio also.

What a deposit!—Your honour, madam, is sarely entrusted. Can punctilio be honour?—It is but the shadow of it. What but that stands against your grant of an early day?—Do not think me missed by any impatience to call you mine, to take an undue advantage of our condescension. Is it not the happiness of both that I wish to confirm? And thall I suffer false delicacy, false gratitude, to take place of the true?—Allow me, madam—But you seem uneasy—I will prolong the time I had intended to beg you would permit me to limit you to. Let me request from you the choice of some one happy day, before the expiration of the next four-teen—

Confider, Sir!

Nothing, madam, happening in my behaviour to cause you to revoke the generous trust: From abroad there cannot.

He looked to be in earnest in his request: Was it not almost an ungenerous return to my confidence in him? Twelve days only had elapsed fince his personal declaration; the letters from Italy which kno the pea My she rits, call ed t he

D.

In furpi

fo m

to ex voke Mrs fulted by th flance your : could it.

Cor

I be The I will ing me it. A for you expect, I took at a pla

Vol.

he had allowed me to wait for unreceived; Lady D. one of the most delicate-minded of women, knowing too my preferable regard for your brother: And must not the hurry have the worse appearance for that? No preparation yet thought of: My aunt thinking his former urgency, greatly as she honours him, rather too precipitating—My spirits, hurried before, were really affected. Do not call me a filly girl, dearest Lady G.: I endeavoured to speak, but, at the instant, could not distinctly.

n-

to le-

wn

ich

ave

dI

ho-

But

e of

not

Sir

ad-

as if ilfo.

faie-

is but gainst

k me

take

Is it

And

o take ut you

intenou to.

ne one

t four-

naviour

: From

t: Was nfidence

ince his

y which

I am forry, madam, that what I have faid has fo much disturbed you. Surely fome one day in the fourteen—

Indeed, indeed, Sir, interrupted I, you have furprifed me: I did not think you could have wished so to limit me—I did not expect—

What, loveliest of women! will you allow me to expect? The day is still at your own choice. Revoke not, however, the generous concession till Mrs Shirley, Mrs Selby, and our Lucy are confulted. Will you, dearest madam, be determined by them?

Say not, Sir, to any of them, after fuch an inflance of my confidence in you—for the honour of your accustomed generofity, fay it not—that you could so limit me, and I will endeavour to forget it.

Confider, my dearest Miss Byron-

I believe my grandmamma is come, faid I-

They are all goodness: They will indulge me. I will tell you, madam, taking my hand and seating me, what is my intention, if you approve of it. All the country suppose that my application for your favour meets with encouragement: They expect, as I have told you, a speedy solemnization. I took my lodgings at some little distance from you, at a place of public entertainment; perhaps (pardon me, madam, for the sake of my ingenuous-Vol. VII.

ness) with some view, that the general talk [see. Lady G.! it is well he is a good man!] would help to accelerate my happy day: But, madam, to con. tinue my daily vifits from thence, when my happiness is supposed to be near, will not perhaps look so well (we are to be studious for looks, it seems)-Indeed I would not be thought to despise the world's opinion: The world, when it will have patience to flay till it is mafter of facts, is not always wrong: It can judge of others better than it can act itself-The change of my lodgings to o. thers in this house, or in Shirley-manor, will not perhaps be allowed till I am bleffed with the hand of the dearest relation of both: I therefore think of going up to town declaredly (why not?) to prepare for our nuptials, and to return near the time agreed upon for the happy celebration. Then will either this house, or Shirley-manor, be allowed to receive the happiest of men.

He flopt: I was filent. He proceeded, looking tenderly, yet fmilingly, in my downcast face, still holding my hand :- And now, dearer to me than life, let me ask you-Can you think it an unpardonable intrusion on your condescending goodness, that I make the time of my return to my Miss Byron not over-tedious?—Fourteen days, were you to go to the extent of them, would be an age to me, who have been for fo many days as happy as a man in expectation can be. I do affure you, madam, that I could not have had the infolence to make you a request, which I rather expected to be forgiven than complied with. I thought myfelf not ungenerous to the confidence you reposed in me, that I gave you so much time. I thought of a week, and began apologizing, left you should think it too fhort; but, when I faw you disturbed, I concluded with the mention of a fortnight. My dearest creature, think me not unreasonable in my expectations of your compliance—

What,

W A fure : fions cafior ratio nefs l for a to fee you r termi may i ficien canno and a

> Ho I will An But own c

Are Yes nerall

Ma in the hopes,

Tha confen mamn If]

It is to fubr tion.

Ver own av

Tell genero I wa What, Sir! in a fortnight!-

As to preparations, madam, you know the pleafure my filters will have in executing any commiffions you will favour them with on so joyful an occasion. Charlotte had not so much time for preparation. But were not every thing to be in readiness by the chosen day, there will be time enough for all you wish, before you would perhaps chuse to see company—Consider, my dearest life, that if you regard punctilio merely, punctilio has no determinate end: Punctilio begets punctilio. You may not half a year hence imagine that to be sufficiently gratified. And allow me to say, that I cannot give up my hope till your grandmamma and aunt decide that I ought.

How, Sir!-And can you thus adhere ?- But I will allow of your reference-

And be determined by their advice, madam?
But I will not trust you, Sir, with pleading your own cause.

Are you not arbitrary, madam?

In this point, if I am, ought I not to be so? Yes, if you will resume a power you had so generally refigned.

May I not, Sir, when I think it over-strained in the hands of the person to whom, in better hopes, it was delegated?

That, dear lady, is the point to be tried. You confent to refer the merits of it to your grand-mamma and aunt?

If I do, Sir, you ought not to call me arbitrary. It is gracious, bowing, in my fovereign lady, to submit her absolute will and pleasure to arbitration.

Very well, Sir!-But will you not fubmit to my ewn award?

Tell me, dear Miss Byron, tell me, if I do, how generous will you be?

I was far from intending-

K 2

Was.

hand hink pretime will ed to oking , still than npardnefs, s Byyou ge to ру а5 , maace to to be myfelt led in ht of a bed, I

. My

in my

What,

fee,

help

conppi-

ok fo

the

have al-

than

0 0-

not

Was, madam——I hope I may dwell upon that word, and repeat my question?

Am, Sir. I am far from intending-

No more, dear madam. I appeal to another tribunal.

Well, Sir, I will endeavour to recollect the fubflance of this conversation, and lay it in writing before the judges you have named. Lucy shall be a third.

You will permit me, madam, to fee your flate of the case, before you lay it before the judges?

No, Sir. None but they must see it, till it makes part of a letter to Lady G. who then shall shew it only to Lady L.

It is the harder to be thus prescribed to, my

dear Miss Byron, because-

What, Sir, in my day ?-

That was what I was going to urge, because mine will never come. Every day, to the end of my life, will be yours [dear man!]—Only, Sir, as I deserve your kindness: I wish not for it on other terms. And you shall be then sole judge of my deferts. I will not appeal to any other tribu-

1

He gracefully bowed. I think, faid he, finiling, I must withdraw my intended appeal: I am half-afraid of my judges, and perhaps ought to rely wholly on your goodness.

No, no, Sir! Your intention is your act. In that fense you have appealed to Cæsar *.

I never before was in love with despotism. You mention writing to my sisters: You correspond with them, I presume, as you formerly did with cur Lucy. L t me tell you, madain, that you had not been Aiss Byron FOURTEEN days after I was favoured with the sight of those letters, had I been

* Alluding to Feflus's answer to St Paul, All xxv. 12.

at l prenob

ness for muc min-

good and der

verfa to he oblig to be will o

Ye faid I

No

A gin a W

do, ti fear.

Sir C will b wrong

did no I thin

To The f by the

at liberty to offer you my heart, and could I have prevailed on you to accept it. Your distress, your noble frankness of heart—

hat

ther

lub-

ing

ll be flate

25 ?

nakes

ew it

, my

cause

nd of

, Sir,

on odge of tribu-

miling,

n halfto rely

. You

respond

id with

r I was

d I been

ul, All

And let me own, Sir, as an instance of the frankness you are pleased to encourage, that gratitude for the deliverance you so nobly gave me, had as much power over my heart, as the openness of mine, and my distress, could have over yours.

Sweet excellence!—Complete your generous goodness to a grateful heart; it is a grateful one; and shorten the days of your single power, in order to enlarge it!

Lucy appeared; but feeing us engaged in conversation, was about to retire: But he, stepping to her, and taking both her hands—Our Lucy, obligingly said he, you must come in—You are to be one judge of three in a certain cause, that will come before you—And I hope—

No prejudgings, Sir Charles, kiid I-You are not to plead at all-

Yet deeply interested in the event, Miss Selby! faid he.

A bad fign, cousin Byron! faid Lucy. I begin already to doubt the justice of your cause.

When you hear it, Lucy, make, as you usually do, the golden rule yours, and I have nothing to fear.

I tell you, before-hand, I am inclined to favour Sir Charles. No three judges can be found, but will believe, from his character, that he cannot be wrong.

But from mine, that I may!—O my Lucy! I did not expect this from my coufin. You must not, I think, be one of my judges.

To this place, I have shewn my three judges. The following is their determination, drawn up by the dear Lady President, my grandmamma:

K. 3 Siz.

Sir Charles Grandison, against Harriet Byron. Et e Contra.

Laid before us by the faid Harriet, That in the whole conversation between the said Sir Charles and her, she has behaved herself with that true virgin delicacy, yet with that laudable unreservedness that might be expected from her character, and his merits. We think the gentleman has the advantage of the lady in the arguments for the early day contended for; and if she has defended herself by little artifices and disguises, we should have no scruple to decide against her: But as she had shewn, throughout the conversation, noble instances of generosity, trust reposed, and even acknowledged affection; we recommend to them both a compromise.

We allow, therefore, Sir Charles Grandison to pursue his intentions of going to town, declaredly to prepare for the happy day; and recommend it to Harriet, in consideration of the merits of the requester (who lays his whole heart open before her, in a manner too generous not to meet with a like return), to fix as early a day as in prudence she can.

For the rest, May the Almighty shower down his blessings on both! May all their contentions, like this, be those of love and true delicacy! May they live together many, very many happy years, an example of conjugal felicity! And may their exemplary virtues meet with an everlasting reward!—So pray, so subscribe, Henrietta Shirley.

Marianne Selby.

Lucy Selby.

gran lett wha larly with tion he h upor

his h

I

brea

thou fhew extra long very I did and, idea ufing

I blu ways imag all of did n ties of be fo good Harring in heart comp

to th

To-morrow morning, when Sir Charles comes to breakfalt, this paper will be presented to him by my grandmamma.

I wonder whether Sir Charles writes to Dr Bartlett an account of what passes here. If he does, what would I give to fee his letters! and, particu. larly, what he thinks of the little delays he meets with! But do, dear Lady G. acquit me of affectation and parade. Indeed it is not that. he himself acquits me, and censures himself; for, upon my word, he is unreasonably hasty.

I could not but express a little curiofity about his hint of Lady Olivia's favourable opinion of me. though not at the time; and he was fo good as to fhew me, and my grandmamma and aunt, a most extraordinary character which she gave me in a long letter *. I faw it was a long letter: I was very Eve-ish, my dear. Lucy faid afterwards, that I did fo leer at it : An ugly word, importing flyness; and, after I was angry at myself for giving her the idea that put her upon applying it, I chid her for uling it. Lady Olivia writes fuch high things, my dear! I bluth—I did not, could not, deferve them. ways pitied her, you know; but now you cannot imagine how much more than ever I pity her. Do all of us, indeed, as the men fay, love flattery?—I did not think I did—I shall find out all the obliquities of my heart in time. I was supposed once to be so good a creature—as if none other were half so good!-Ah, my partial friends! you studied your Harriet in the dark; but here comes the fun darting into all the crooked and obscure corners of my heart; and I shrink from his dazzling eye; and compared to Him (and Clementina, let me add) appear to myself such a Nothing—

Nay, I have had the mortification, once or twice, to think myself less than the very Olivia, upon whom,

n.

case tin rles virredter, the the ded ould The inacboth

lifon deomerits n bemeet prun his like they s, an r ex-

LEY.

d!-

orrow

See Vol. VI. p. 181-2.

whom, but lately, secure of my mind's superiority to her mind, I looked down with a kind of proud compassion: And whence this kind exaltation of Olivia, and self-humiliation?—Why, from her magnifying beyond measure the poor Harriet, and yielding up her own hopes, entreating him, as she does, to address me; and that with such honourable distinction, as if my acceptance of him were doubtful, and a condescension.

I wish I could procure you a copy of what your brother read to me—Ah, my dear! it is very soothing to my pride!—But what is the foundation of that pride? Is it not my ambition to be thought worthily of by the best of men? And does not praise stimulate me to resolve to deserve praise? I will endeavour to deserve it. But, my dear, this Olivia, a fine figure herself, and loving in spite of discouragement, can praise to the object of her love, the person, and still more, the mind, of her rival?—Is not that great in Olivia? Could I be so great, if I thought myself in danger from her?

LETTER XII.

Miss Byron. In Continuation.

Selby-houfe, Wedn. Oft. 25.

SIR Charles came not this morning till we were all assembled for breakfast. I had begun to think, whether, if I had been Sir Charles, and he had been Miss Byron, I would not have been here an hour before, expecting the decision of the judges to whom a certain cause was referred. O my dear Lady G.! how narrow-minded I am, with all my quondam heroism! The knowledge of his past engagements with the excellent Clementina, and of his earnest withes then to be hers, makes me, on ever ance atha pelle took (wh give

> Nan hope in m

best

love and dem M befo pape

it, S finit argu her was The ceiv

> put that whi

every

look

ver

every occasion that can be to tured into an appearance of neglect or coldness, so filly!—Indeed I am ashamed of myself. But all my petulance was dispelled, the instant he shone upon us.

Well, my dear ladies, faid he, the moment he took his place, whifpering to my grandmamma (who fat between my aunt and Lucy), Is fentence given?

rity

oud

a of nag-

and

the ura-

were

your oth-

n of ught

raile

len-

ria, a cou-

, the

_Is

if I

25.

were an to

id he

here

udges

dear

ll my palt

, and

every

It is, Sir Charles—He took my hand, cross my Nancy's lap, as the fat between him and me—I have hopes, my dear Miss Byron [from the foolishness in my looks, I suppose], that you are cast.

Have patience, Sir, faid I—It is well that the best of us are not always to be our own carvers.

He looked, Lucy faid afterwards, with eyes of love upon me, and of apprehension on his judges; and the discourse turned upon indifferent subjects.

I retired as foon as breakfast was over; and he demanded his fentence.

My uncle was, as he called it, turned out of door before my grandmamma gave your brother the paper.

Sir Charles read it—You are not ferious upon it, Sir Charles, faid my grandmamma?—I am infinitely obliged to you, ladies, replied he. I love to argue with my dear Miss Byron: I must attend her this moment.

He fent up Sally before him, and came up. I was in my closet; and scrupled not to admit him.

Henceforth, my dearest dear Miss Byron, said he, the moment he approached me (as I stood up to receive him) I salute you undoubtedly mine—And he saluted me with ardor—I knew not which way to look—So polite a lover, as I thought him!—Yet never man was so gracefully free!—It remains now, madam, proceeded he, still holding my hand, to put to trial your goodness to me [You have done that already, thought I!] in the great question, by which I am to conduct myself for the next week, or ten

ten days. Week or ten days, thought I! Surely, Sir, you are an increacher.

You see, Sir, said I, when a little recovered, what judges who, on such points as these, cannot err, have determined.

Yes, they can, interrupted he: As Ladies, they are parties—But I submit. Their judgment must be a law to me—I will go up to town, as they advise. I cannot, however, be long absent from you. When I return, I will not put up at a public place. Either your uncle, or your grandmother, must allow me to be their guest. This will oblige you, I hope, even for dear punctilio sake, to honour me with your hand very foon after my return

He paused: I was silent. His first address had put me out. Remember, madam, I said, resumed he, that I cannot be long absent: You are above being governed by mere punctilio. Add to the obligations your generous acceptance of me has laid me under—Why sighs my angel? [It was, my dear Lady G. an involuntary sigh!]—For the world, I would not give you either sensible or lasting pain. But if the same circumstances would make your nomination of a day as painful to you? some time hence as now, then bless me with as early a day as you can give me, to express myself in the words of my judges.

This, Sir, faid I (but I hefitated, and looked down), is one of the folemn points which precede one of the most folemn circumstances of my life. You seem more in earnest for an early day than I could have expected. When I have declared that affectation has no part in the more distant compliance, I may be allowed, by the nicest of my own sex, to lay open to a man so generous, though so precipitating, my whole heart. Indeed, Sir, it is wholly yours—I blushed, as I felt, and turned away my face. It was a free declaration: But I was resolved to banish affectation. He bowed profoundly

found ed ou mann

found ought that y

judgm that for myfelf

I the

my ha
Do Wh

Do Six weeks he spo

Wh to expe (and I this da not pe

He once, then, I Allow month

O S your re

Und alfo, d from y

My to allo foundly on my hand, and kiffed it. Gratitude looked out in his eyes, and appeared in his graceful manner, though attentively filent.

You was my deliverer, proceeded I. An esteem founded on gratitude, the object so meritorious, ought to set me above mere forms—Our judges say, that you have the advantage in the argument—

I will lay no stress, madam, on this part of their judgment in my favour—To your goodness, and to that so nobly acknowledged esteem, I wholly refer myself.

I think myself, proceeded I, that you have the advantage in the argument—All that is in my power, I would wish to do to oblige you.

Condescending goodness !- Again he bowed on my hand.

Do you think, Sir-

v,

at

T, ey

ilt

ou.

ce.

al-

me

had ned

ob-

laid

dear

d, I

no-

time

ay as ds of oked

cede

life.

an I

that mpli-

own

gh io

it is

ed a-But I

d pro-

Why hefitates my love?
Do you think, fix weeks—

Six ages, my dearest, dearest creature!—Six weeks! For heaven's fake, madam—He looked, he spoke, impatience.

What can a woman, who has owned your title to expect to be obliged, fay—Let me, at least, ask (and I unaffectedly hesitated) a month, Sir—from this day—And that you will acknowledge yourself not perversely or weakly treated.

He dropt on one knee, and kissing my hand, once, twice, thrice, with rapture, Within the month, then, I hope—I cannot live a month from you—Allow me to return in the first fortnight of the month—

O Sir! and take up your refidence with us, on your return?

Undoubtedly madam.—Confider, Sir—Do you also, dearest madam, confider; and banish me not from you for so very long a time.

My heart wanted, I thought, to oblige him; but to allow him to return fooner, as he was to take up

his

his abode with us, what was that, but, in effect, complying with his first proposal?

Permit me, Sir, to retire. Indeed you are too urgent.

He asked my excuse; but declared that he would not give up his humble plea (humble he called it) unless my grandmamma and aunt told him, that he ought.

On his leaving me to return to company below, he presented me with sour little boxes. Accept, my beloved Miss Byron, said he, of these trisses. I received them not till this morning. While I had the day to hope from you, my heart would not suffer me to offer them, least you should suspect me mean enough to imagine an influence from them. I oblige mysfelf by the tender, and I comply with custom, which I am fond of doing, whenever I can innocently do it. But I know, that you, my dear Miss Byron, value the heart more than a thousand times the value of these—Mine, madam, is yours, and will be yours to the end of my life.

What could I fay?—My heart, on recollection, reproaches me for my ungraceful acceptance. I courtefied. I was filly. Sir Charles Grandison only can be prefent to every occasion.

He looked as if my not resusing them was a favour more than equivalent to the value of the presents. My dearest life, said he, on putting them on my toilette, how much you oblige me!—Shail I conduct you to our friends below? Will you acquaint your grandmamma and aunt with our debate, and my bold expectation?

I flood still. He took my hand, pressed it with his lips, and, with a reverence more than usually prosound, as if he had received instead of conferred a favour, withdrew. Never was a present so gracefully made! I cannot describe the grace with which he made it.

My g his co riet h

Ha I am

Sir Cl

fifted

would yet, la Nay

month comes that fi plaud term-room forward ten mi

you us: The period cannot that ever compare with his brother

I AM well Vol.

My

121

My uncle, it feems, as foon as he went down, asked him, How he had settled the great affair? My grandmamma and aunt in a breath, as he paid his compliments to them, asked him, if their Harriet had been good?—or, as good as he expected?

Miss Byron, said he, has taken more time than I could have wished she had. A month, she talks of.

Has she complied so far? faid my grandmamma: I am glad of it. I am afraid she would have insisted upon more time—

So was I, said my aunt. But who can withstand Sir Charles Grandison? Has the dear girl given you the very day, Sir?

00 ild

in-

he

he

be-

iv.

day

to ugh

THY-

nich

de

ron,

va-

1 be

tion,

lifon

a fa-

pre-

m on ail l u ac-

r de-

with fually ferred

grace.

which

My

No, madam. If the had, I should have hoped it would have been confiderably within the month. As vet, ladies, I hope it will.

Nay, Sir Charles, if you are not pleased with a month, said my aunt—Hush, dear ladies!—Here comes the angel.—Not a word, I beseech you, on that side of the question—She will think, if you applaud her, that she has consented to too short a term—You must not make her uneasy with herself.

Does not this look as if he imagined there was room for me to be so?—I almost wish—I don't know what I wish; except I could think but half so well of myself as I do of him: For then should I look forward with less pain in my joy than now too often mingles with it.

Your brother excused himself from dining with us: That Greville has engaged him. Why would he permit himself to be engaged by him? Greville cannot love him: He can only admire him, and that every body does, who has been but once in his company. Miss Orme, even Miss Orme is in love with him. I received a note from her while your brother was with us. These are the contents:

Dear Miss Byron,

I AM in love with your young baronet. It is well that your beauty and your merit fecure You. VII.

you, and make every other woman hopeless. To fee and and know Miss Byron is half the cure, un. less a woman were presumption itself. O my poor brother !- But will you let me expect you, and as many of the dear family as you can bring, at break. fast to-morrow morning ?- Sir Charles Grandison, of courfe. Shew your own obligingness to me, and your power over him, at the fame time. Your cousins Holles will be with me, and three fifter toasts of York; besides that Miss Clarkson, of whose beauty and agreeableness you have heard me talk. They long to fee you. You may come. Poor things! how they will be mortified! If any one of them can allow herfelf to be less lovely than the others, the will be least affected with your superiority. But let me tell you, that Miss Clarkson, had she the intelligence in her eyes that fomebody else has, and the dignity with the ease, would be as charming a young woman. But we are all prepared, I to love, they to admire, your gentleman. Pray, pray, my dear, bring him, or the disappointment will kill

Your KITTY ORME.

Lucy, acquainting Sir Charles with the invitation, asked him, if he would oblige Miss Orme. He was at our command, he said—So we shall breakfast to-morrow at The Park.

But I am vexed at his dining from us to-day. So little time to stay with us! I wish him to be complaifant to Mr Greville; but need he be so very obliging? There are plots laying for his company all over the country. We are told, there is to be a numerous assembly, all of gentlemen, at Mr Greville's. Mr Greville humorously declares, that he hates all women for the sake of one.

We have just opened the boxes. O my dear Lady G.! your brother is either very proud, or his for he alw matter these p tune of Harrie kappy, though fortune the offe

ven in them:

toys, make is a things in jewels of jewels of jewels of jewels of jewels of just now —Not I am all thing the firikes not; regrateful ther's r

I With before I mean.

his fortune is very high! Does he not fay, that he always confults fortune, as well as degree, in matters of outward appearance? He has not, in these presents, I am sure, consulted either the fortune or degree of your Harriet—Of your happy Harriet, I had like to have written: But the word happy, in this place, would have looked as if I thought these jewels an addition to my happiness.

How does his bounty infult me, on my narrow fortune!—Narrow, unless he submit to accept of the offered contributions of my friends-

Contributions !- Proud Harriet, how art thou, even in thy exaltation, humbled !- Trifles, he called them: The very ornamenting one's felf with fuch toys, may, in his eye, be thought trifling, though he is not above complying with the fathion, in things indifferent: But the cost and beauty of these jewels confidered, they are not trifles. The jewel of jewels, however, is his heart !—How would the noble Clementina-Hah, Pen! heart, rather, why, just now, this check of Clementina?—I know why -Not from want of admiration of her; but when I am allowing my heart to open, then does—Something here, in my inmost bosom [Is it conscience?] strikes me, as if it faid, Ah, Harriet!-Triumph not; rejoice not! Check the overflowings of thy grateful heart !- Art thou not an invader of another's right?

LETTER XIII.

Mifs Byron. In Continuation.

Thursday Morning, Off. 26.

Will hurry off a few lines. I am always ready before these siddling girls: Lucy and Nancy, I mean. Never tedious, but in dressing! They

To unpoor d as eak-ison, me, Your fister whose talk. Poor ne of he o-

ority.
d she has,
arm-

red, I Pray, ment

DRME.

He oreak-

to be no very hat he y dear

will over-do the morning appearance. I could beat them—So well acquainted with propriety as they are; and knowing the beauty of elegant negligence. Were I not afraid of Lucy's repartee, and that she would fay I was laying out for a com. pliment, I would tell them, they had a mind to try to eclipfe Miss Clarkson, and the Yorkshire ladies. Your brother supped, as well as dined, at that Greville's. Fie upon him! I did not think he had fo little command of himself !- Vain Harriet! Perhaps he chose to be rather there than here, for novelty-fake, I shall be faucy by and by. He is below, strongly engaged in talk with my aunt-About me, I suppole: Ay, to be fure! methinks your ladyship fays. He can talk of no body elie!—Well, and what if one would with he could not? [What are thefe girls about ?] No less than one-and-twenty gentlemen at Creville's, besides the prince of them all. all were ready to worthip him. Fenwick looked in just now, and tells us fo. He fays, that your brother was the livelieft man in the company. He led the mirth, he fays, and visibly exerted himfelf the more, finding the turn of the conversation likely to be what might be expected from fuch a company of all men. Wretches! can twenty of them, when met, be tolerable creatures, not a woman among them to foften thier manners, and give politeness to their conversation? Fenwick says, they engaged him at one time into talk of different regions, customs, usages. He was master of every fubject. Half a score mouths were open at once whenever he spoke, as if distended with gags, was his word; and every one's eyes broader than ever they were observed to be before. Fenwick has humour; a little: Not much; only by accident. So unlike himself at times, that he may pass for a different man. His aping Greville helps his oddness --How I ramble! You'll think I am aping my dear Lady G. Mocking's catching !- [O thefe girls!] girls to ye my o befor of he all fi He t Lord -Do tenan ah! whole uncle Inn! Iam good What upon man i man c Tits, C pected girls, > Real to hav —Adi

made

bout S

Just and mirious to parent' a distant I may so I sto

We Miss C ould

y as

ne-

rtee,

om-

) try

dies.

Gre-

id fo

haps

fake.

ngly

iup-

fays.

at if

girls

en at

They

oked

your pany.

him-

ation

ich a ty of

1 WO-

and fays,

ferent

once

, was ever

as hu-

t. So a dif.

dness

g my thefe

irls!]

girls 1]-I think time loft when I am not writing to you. You cannot imagine what a thief I am to my company. I steal away myself, and get down, before I am missed, half a score times in a couple Sir Charles fung to the wretches: They of hours. They encored him without mercy .all fung. He talks of fetting out for town on Saturday, early. Lord blefs me! what shall I do when he is gone? -Do you think I fay this? If I do, I am kept in countenance: Every-body fays fo, as well as I-But ah! Lady G. he has invited all the gentlemen, the whole twenty-one, and my cousin James, and my uncle, to dine with him at his inn to-morrow!--Inn! nafty inn! Why did we let him go thither? I am afraid he is a reveller. Can he be so very good a man? O yes, yes, yes! wicked Harriet! What is in thy heart to doubt it? A fine reflection upon the age; as if there could not be but one: good man in it! and as if a good man could not be a man of vivacity and spirit! From whom can spirits, can chearfulness, can debonnairness, be expected, if not from a good man? - I will shew these girls, by the quantity I have written, how they have made me wait. Prating, I suppose, to my Sally, about Sir Charles. They can talk of nobody elfe.

Ready! Yes, you dear creatures! So you ought to have been a leaf and a half of my writing ago!

Adieu, Lady G. till our return from Miss Orme's.

Thurfday Noon.

Just come back from Miss Orme's. Sir Charles and my grandmamma are now got together in serious talk. I know I was the subject, by the dear parent's looking often smiling upon me, as I sat at a distance, and by his eye (taking the reference, as I may call it, of hers) turned as often towards me; so I stole up to my pen.

We were very politely treated by Miss Orme. Miss Clarkson is a charming young lady. The three

L 3 Yorkshire

Yorkshire sisters are lovely women. Sir Charles has told us, that mere beauty only attracts his eye, as fine flowers do in a gay parterre. I don't know that, my dear: That's the philosophical description of himfelf. The fame men and women are not always the fame persons. The ladies, one and all, when his back was turned, declared that he was the gallantest man they ever were in company with. faid the easiest, politest things, they ever heard spoken—They never were in his company before: They might elfe have heard as fine. Such dignity they observed (so does every-body), yet so much ease, in all he faid, as well as in his whole behaviour— Born to be a public man, would his pride permit him to aim at being fo!-Not a fyllable, however, but what might be faid to each with the strictest Sir Charles Grandison [It is Lucy's obfervation, as well as mine] addresses himself to women, as women, not as goddesses; yet does honour to the persons, and to the sex. Other men, not knowing what better to fay, make angels of The highest things are ever faid them all at once. by men of the lowest understandings; and, their bolts once shot, the poor souls can go no further. So filly !—Has not your ladyship some of these in your eye, who make out the rest, by grinning in our faces, in order to convince us of their fincerity? Complimental men don't confider, that if the women they egregiously flatter were what they would have them believe they think them, they would not be feen in fuch company.

But what do you think the elder fifter of the three faid of your brother ?- She was fure, those eyes, and that vivacity and politeness, were not given him for nothing. Given him for nothing! What a phrase is that! In fhort, she faid, that practice had improved his natural advantages. This I have a good mind to fay of her-Either she has not charity, or her heart has paid for enabling its mistress to make are, of hi faid, their noce affen caug her have Harr when fuch

the

edly

Clai

grou

I

the fe Bu of a r

Iv

gratin

migh

гу, у

just tl ed co it gre ing to and n compa ny bo ment, compa charac -But the ma am gr

be-P Py! T

es

e,

W

of

ys

en

al-

He

00-ney

ney afe,

-

mit

er, test

ob-

wo-

ho-

nen.

of faid heir

her.

e in g in ity?

wo-

ould I not

hree

and

him rafe

im-

good or or make

fuch

fuch an observation. Practice! What meant she by the word?—Indeed your brother was not so abstractedly inattentive, I thought, to the beauty of Miss Clarkson, but he might give some little shadow of ground for observation to a censorious person.

I fometimes think, that, free and open as his eyes are, his character might fuffer, if one were to judge of his heart by them. Lord L. I remember, once faid, that ladies abroad used to look upon him as their own man, the moment they beheld him.-Innocently fo, no doubt, and in their conversationaffemblies. Poor Lady Olivia, I suppose, was so caught! at an unhappy moment, perhaps, when her caution was half-afleep, and she was loth to have it too rudely awakened. But ought I, your Harriet, to talk of this ?-Where was my caution. when I fuffered myself to be furprised ?- O but my gratitude was my excuse. Who knows what Olivia might have to plead ?-We have not her whole story, you know. Poor lady, I pity her! To cross the feas, as she did !—Ineffectually!

But can you bear that pen-prattling; the effects of a mind more at ease than it ever expected to be?

I will go down. Can I be so long spared? I am just thinking, that were I one of the creatures called coquettes, the best way to attract attention when it grew languid, is to do as I do from zeal in writing to you-Be always going out and returning, and not staying long enough in a place to tire one's company, or fuffer them to turn their eyes upon any body else. Did you ever try such an experiment, Charlotte? But you never could tire your Yet I think you have a spice of that company. character in yours. Don't you think fo yourfelf? -But don't own it, if you do-Hey-day! What's the matter with me! I believe by my flippancy I am growing quite well, and as faucy as I used to be-Poor Lady Clementina! I wish she were hap-Py! Then should I be so.

My dear Lady G. we had a charming conversa. tion this day: My grandmamma and your brother bore the principal parts in it. It began with drefs, and fashion, and such-like triffing subjects; but ended in the noblest. You know my grandmamma's chearful piety. Sir Charles seemed at first only defigning to attend to her wifdom; but she drew him in. O my dear! he feems to be, yet not to know it, as good a man as the is a woman! Yet years fo different !- But austerity, uncharitableness, on one hand; oftentation, affectation, on the other: thefe are qualities which can have no place in his heart. Such a glorious benevolence! Such enlarged fentiments!-What a happy, thrice happy woman, thought I, feveral times, must she be, who shall be considered as a partaker of his goodness! Who shall be blest not only in him, but for him; and be his, and he hers, to all eternity!

My aunt once, in the conclusion of this converfation, faid, How happy would it be if he could reform certain gentlemen of this neighbourhood! And as they were so fond of his company, she hoped he would attempt it.

Example, he answered, and a filent one, would do more with such men than precept. They have Moses, and the prophets. They know when they do wrong, and what is right. They would be asraid of, and affronted at, a man pretending to instruct them. Decency from such men is as much as can be expected. We live in such an age, added he, that I believe more good may be done by seeming to relax a little, than by strictness of behaviour. Yet I admire those, who, from a sull persuasion of their duty, do not relax; and the more, if they have got above moroseness, austerity, and uncharitableness.

After dinner, Mr Milbourne, a very good man, minister of a dissenting congregation in our neighbourhood, accompanied by Dr Curtis, called in med whe Dr (Sir (him, comp the g your eafy, inftrugive T

upor

were proof their uncle churche c Charconfe in co Schiff prefer we on

I b my u the n looked with a flower

Fathe

Mr Se not, i verfity force, I coul perfua

upon

upon us. They are good friends, made so by the mediation of my grandmamma, some years ago, when they did not so well understand each other. Dr Curtis had been with us more than once since Sir Charles was our visiter. He greatly admires him, you need not doubt. It was beautiful, after compliments had passed between Sir Charles and the gentleman, to see the modest man shine out in your brother's behaviour. Indeed he was free and easy, but attentive, as expecting entertainment and instruction from them, and leading each of them to give it in his own way.

er

fs.

ut

a's

le-

im

WC

ars

on

er;

his

en-

ppy

vho

fs!

m; rer-

uld

od!

op-

d do

ofes,

and iem.

CX-

at I ct I

their

e got neis.

man,

d in

upon

They staid but a little while; and when they were gone, Sir Charles said, he wanted no other proof of their being good men than they gave by their charity and friendship to each other. My uncle, who you know is a zealous man for the church, speaking a little severely of persons whom he called Schismatics; O Mr Selby! said Sir Charles, let us be asraid of prescribing to tender consciences. You and I, who have been abroad in countries where they account us worse than Schismatics, would have been loth to have been prescribed to, or compelled, in articles for which we ourselves are only answerable to the common Father of us all?

I believe in my confcience, Sir Charles, replies my uncle, if the truth were known, you are of the mind of that king of Egypt, who faid, He looked upon the diversity of religions in his kingdomwith as much pleasure as he did on the diversity of flowers in his garden.

I remember not the name of that king of Egypt, Mr Selby; but I am not of his mind. I should not, if I were a king, take pleasure in such a diversity: But as the examples of kings are of great force, I would, by making my own as faultless as I could, let my people see the excellence of my persuasion, and my uniform practical adherence to

it :

it; instead of discouraging erroneous ones by unjustifiable severity. Religious zeal is generally a fiery thing: I would as foon quarrel with a man for his face as for his religion. A good man, if not over-heated by zeal will be a good man, whatever be his faith, and should always be intitled to our esteem, as he is to our good offices, as a fellow-creature.

The Methodifts, Sir Charles; what think you of the Methodists? Say you love 'em; and, and, and, adds-dines, you shall not be my nephew.

You now, my dear Mr Selby, make me afraid of you. You throw out a menace, the only one you could perhaps think of that would make me temporize.

You need not, you need not be afraid, Sir Charles, faid my uncle, laughing! What fay you, Harriet? Need he? Hay? looking in my downcast face. Why speak you not, levely love? Need Sir Charles, if he had disobliged me, to have been afraid?—Hay?

Dear Sir! you have not of a long time been

So what, Harriet? So what, dearest?-looking me quite down.

Fie, Mr Selby! faid my grandmamma.

Sir Charles, stepping to me, very gallantly took my hand-O Mr Selby, you are not kind, faid he: But allow me to make my advantage of your unkindness. My dear Miss Byron, let you and me withdraw; in compassion to Mr Selby, let us withdraw: We will not hear him chidden as I fee the ladies think he ought to be.

And he hurried me off. The furprise made me appear more reluctant than I was in my heart.

Every one was pleafed with his air and manner, and by this means he relieved himself from subjects with which he feemed not delighted, and obtained opportunity to get me to himself.

Here

me me fed ferv lott fron with ful : I th any men

Bu

jea.

M uncl Can feral none has 1 bout

I dear it to De have Sir C All is dency er tha tance heave a forti more from (

Here had he stopt, he would have been welcome: But, hurrying me into the cedar-parlour, I am jealous, my love, said he, putting his arm round me: You seemed loth to retire with me. Forgive me: But thus I punish you whenever you give me cause: And, dear Lady G. he downright kissed me—My lip, and not my cheek—and in so fervent a way—I tell you every thing, my Charlotte—I could have been angry—had I known how from surprise. Before I could recollect myself, he withdrew his arm; and, resuming his usual respectful air, it would have made me look affected, had I then taken notice of it. But I don't remember any instance of the like freedom used to Lady Clementina.

My lovely love, faid he, to express myself in your uncle's style, which is that of my heart, tell me, Can you have pity for a poor man when he is miserable, who, on a certain occasion, shewed you none? See what a letter Sir Hargrave Pollexien has written to Dr Bartlett, who asks my advice about attending him.

I obtained have to communicate it to you, my dear Lady L. and Lady G. Be pleafed to return it to me. I presume you will read it here.

Dear Dr Bartlett,

f

o

1-

of

d, iid

ne

me

Sir

0113 vn-

 ϵ ed

een

een

ook.

took

he:

un-

me

with-

I fee

le me

mner,

bjects

btain-

Here

t.

CAN your company be dispensed with by the best of men, for one, two, three days?—I have not had a happy hour since I saw you and Sir Charles Grandison at my house on the forest. All is gloom and horror in my mind: My despondency is, must be, of the blackest kind. It is blacker than remorfe: It is all repining, but no repentance: I cannot, cannot repent. Lord God of heaven and earth, what a wretch am I! with such a fortune, such estates! I am rich as Cræsus, yet more miserable than the wretch that begs his bread from door to door, and who oftener meets repul-ses than relief. What a glorious choice has your patron made! Youth unbroken, conscience his friend, he cannot know an enemy. O that I had lived the life of your patron! I cannot see a creature who does not extol him. My wine-merchant's name is Danby-Good God! What stories does he tell of him! Lord Jefus! what a heart must he have, that would permit him to do fuch things as Danby reports of him of his own knowledge! While I—as young a man as himself, for what I know-With powers to do good, as great, perhaps greater than his own-Lord! Lord! Lord! what a hand have I made of it, for the last three or four years of my life! who might have reached threescore and ten with comfort! whereas now, at twenty-eight, I am on the very brink of the grave. It appears to me as ready dug: It yawns for me: I am neither fit to die nor to live. My days are dreadful: My nights are worse: My bed is a bed of nettles, and not of down. Not one comfortable thought, not one good action to revolve, in which I had not fome vile gratification to promote!-Wretched man! It is come home to me with a vengeance.

You prayed by me: You prayed for me. I have not been so happy since—Come and make me easy—happy I can never be in this world—For pity, for charity-sake, come and teach me how to bear life, or how to prepare for its cessation. And if Sir Charles Grandison would make me one more visit, would personally join in prayer with you and me, a glimpse of comfort would once more dart in upon my mind.

Try your interest with him, my dear Sir, in my behalf, and come together. Where is he?—The great God of heaven and earth prosper to him all his wishes, be he where he will, and be they what they will. Every body will find their account in his prosperity. But I!—what use have I made of

Narro able he can help in bad en

On It is, thoug afterw ved as body 1 execut My re death, next h by me. rer, m if you your l and fay I must) will rej a discre think I be my me in t happy. include bad a n am a C vil in pi give me Tell S the fervinterpose Vot.

tell me

the prosperity given me ?- Merceda gone to his account: Bagenhall undone: Jordan thunning me: Narrow-foul'd Jordan! He is reformed: but, not able to divide the man from the crime, he thinks he cannot be in earnest but by hating both. God help me! I cannot now, if I would, give him a bad example! He needed not be afraid of my staggering him in his good purpofes.

our

his nad

rea-

nt's loes

t he

s as ge!

at I

haps

what

e or ched

w, at rave. me:

are a bed

table

which te!-

ith a

have

e easy

pity,

bear

nd it more

ou and e dart

in my

-The

nim all y what ount in nade et

the

One favour, for God's fake, procure for me-It is, that the man whose life once I fought, and thought myfelf justified by the provocation; who afterwards faved mine, for a time faved it, referved as I was for pains, for fufferings in mind and body worse that death—That this man will be the executor of my last will. I have not a friend left. My relations are hungering and watching for my death, as birds of prey over a field of battle. My next heirs are my worst enemies, and most hated by me. Dear Sir Charles Grandison, my deliverer, my preserver, from those bloody Frenchmen, if you are the good man I think you, complete your kindness to him whom you have preserved. and fay you will be his executor. I will (because I must) do justice to the pretensions of those who will rejoice over my remains, and I will leave you a discretionary power in articles wherein you may think I have shewn hatred. For justice-fake, then, be my executor. And do you, good Bartlett, put me in the way of repentance, and I shall then be happy. Draw me up, dear Sir, a prayer that shall include a confession. You cannot suppose me too bad a man in a Christian sense. Thank God, I am a Christian in belief, though I have been a devil in practice. You are a heavenly-minded man; give me words which may go to my heart, and tell me what I shall fay to my God.

Tell Sir Charles Grandison, that he owes to me the service I request of him. For if he had not interposed so hellishly as he did on Hounslow-Vot. VII.

heath, I had been the husband of Miss Byron in two hours; and she would have thought it her duty to reform me: And, by the great God of heaven I swear, it was my intention to be reformed, and to make her, if I could have had but her civility, though not her love, the best of husbands. Lord God of heaven and earth! what a happy man had I then been!—Then had I never undertaken that damned expedition to France, which I have rued ever since. Let your patron know how much I owe to him my unhappiness, and he will not, in justice, deny any reasonable, any honest request that I shall make him.

Lord help me! What a long letter is here! My foul complains on paper: I do nothing but complain. It will be a relief if your patron and you will vifit, will pray for, will pity

The most miserable of men,

HARGRAVE POLLEXFEN.

Your brother's eye followed mine as I read. I frequently wept. In a foothing, tender, and respectful manner, he put his arm round me, and, taking my own handkerchief, unresisted, wiped away the tears as they fell on my cheek. These were his foothing words as my bosom heaved at the dreadful description of the poor man's misery and despair: Sweet humanity!—Charming sensibility!—Check not the kindly gush!—Dew drops of heaven! wiping away my tears, and kissing the handkerchief—Dew-drops of heaven, from a mind, like that heaven, mild and gracious! Poor Sir Hargrave!—I will attend him.

You will, Sir! That is very good of you!-Poor man! What a hand, as he fays, has he made of it!

hand indeed! repeated Sir Charles, his own benign eyes gliftening.

And I hope I w

Sı

wishes poor in he ough
or not to his they ar capable

Who man m two hor fhudden I to be

Ever

I been, With te angel or as a mallove, he vingness dorn the Be you and I sh madam, fery, tarthat adm

Your Sir, will make he your dea

There in one! SW hat is there be

But, S

And

And will you be his executor, Sir !- You will,

I hope ?

in du-lea-

ied,

ci-

nds.

PPY

der-

ch I

how

will

t re-

My

com-

you

I will do any thing that my dear Miss Byron wishes me to do; any thing that may comfort the poor man, if indeed he has not a person in whom he ought to confide, whether he is willing to do so or not. My endeavour shall be, to reconcile him to his relations: Perhaps he hates them because they are likely to be his heirs: I have known men capable of such narrowness.

When we came to the place where the unhappy man mentions my having been likely to be his in two hours time, a chillness came over my heart; I shuddered. Ah, Sir! said!, how grateful ought

I to be to my deliverer!

Ever-amiable goodness! resumed he, how have I been, how am I, how shall I be rewarded?——With tender awe he kissed my cheek—Forgive me, angel of a woman! A man can shew his love but as a man. Your heart is the heart I wish it to be; love, humanity, graciousness, benevolence, forgivingness, all the amiable qualities which can adorn the female mind, are, in perfection, yours! Be your sister-excellence happy! God grant it! and I shall be the happiest man in the world. You, madam, who can pity your oppressor when in mifery, can allow of my grateful remembrance of that admirable woman.

Your tender remembrance of Lady Clementina, Sir, will ever be grateful to me.—God Almighty make her happy!—for your fake! for the fake of your dear Jeronymo, and for mine!

There fpoke Miss Byron and Clementina, both in one! Surely you two are informed by one mind! What is distance of countries! What obstacles can there be to differer fouls fo paired?

But, Sir,—Must Clementina be compelled to marry? Must the woman who has loved Sir Charles

M 2

Grandison:

d. I ad reand, sed a-Thefe yed at These wed at nifery sensite drops ng the mind, or Sir

ou! e made

is own

And

Grandison; who still avows her love, and only prefers her God to him, be obliged to give her hand to another man?

Would to Heaven that her friends, tender, indulgent, as they have always been to her, would not drive too fast! But how can I, of all men, remonstrate to them in this case, when they think not thing is wanting to obtain her compliance, but the knowledge that she never can be mine?

O Sir! you shall still call her yours, if the dear lady changes her resolution, and wishes to be so-

Ought you not?

And could Mifs Byron-

She could, the would, interrupted I—Yet dear, very dear, I am not ashamed to own it, would now the resignation cost me!

Exalted loveliness!

I never, but by fuch a tria', can be as great as Clementina.—Then could I, as fire does, take comfort in the brevity of human life. Never, never, would I be the wife of any other man. And shall the robler Clementina be compelled?

Good God! lifting up his hands and eyes, with what noble minds half thou diffinguished these two women!—Is it for this, madam, that you wish to wait for the next letters from Italy? I have owned before, that I presumed not to declare my self to you till I was sure of Clementina's adherence to resolution so nobly taken. We will, however, copect the next letters. My situation has not been happy. Nothing but the consciousness of my own integrity (excuse, madam, the seeming boast), and a firm trust in Providence, could, at certain times have supported me.

My mind, my Charlotte, seemed too high wrought. Seeing me much disturbed, he resumd the subject of Sir Hargrave's letter, as a somewhat less-affecting one. You see, my dearest Miss Byron faid he, a kind of necessity for my hastening up

Ano Harr -WHarg matic patch time fome Poor bours certain to me admir I was not av endeav probat ning, Sunday with y coufin pose w early (as

He f

the fick

fear of the enter himfelf morning I shall m him, the you let I would b woman!

I asked

Anothe

Another melancholy occasion offers: Poor Sir Harry Beauchamp defires to fee me before he dies. -What a chequered life is this!-I received Sir Hargrave's letter to Dr Bartlett, and this intimation from my Beauchamp, by a particular difpatch, just before I came hither. I grudge the time I must lose to-morrow: But we must make fome facrifices to good neighbourhood and eivility. Poor Greville had a view, by inviting all his neighbours and me, to let himfelf down gracefully in a certain cafe. He made a merit of his refignation to me, before all the company; every one of which admired my dear Miss Byron. Well received as I was by every gentleman then prefent, I could not avoid inviting them in my turn; but I will endeavour to recover the time. Have I your approbation, madam, for fetting out on Saturday morning, early ?- I am afraid I must borrow of the Sunday some hours on my journey. But visiting the fick is an act of mercy.

You will be so engaged to-morrow, Sir, said I, with your numerous guests (and my uncle and cousin James will add to the number), that I suppose we shall hardly see you before you set out early (as you say that will be) on Saturday morning.

He faid, he had given orders already (and, for fear of mistakes, should inforce them to-night) for the entertainment of his guests; and he would do himself the pleasure of breakfasting with us in the morning.—Dear Lady Clementina, forgive me!—I shall not, I am afraid, know how to part with him, though but for a few weeks.—How could you let him depart from you; you knew not but it would be for ever?—But you are a wonder of a woman!—I am, at least at this time, a poor creature, compared to you!

I asked his leave to shew my grandmamma and aunt, and my Lucy, as well as his two sisters, Sir-

M 3 Hargrave's

n times

oo high refund

omcwhat

s Byroz

ning up

Anetha

only

her

, 111

ould

1, 10.

k no.

it the

dear

10-

dear,

d now

eat as

, take Never,

man.

s, with efe two with to

Owned

y icht to nce to a ot bea

my cwi

ft), and

Hargrave's letter. He wished that they only should fee it.

The perusal cost the three dear friends just named fome tears. My grandmamma, Lucy tells me (for I was writing to you when they read it), made some fine observations upon the different situations in which the two gentlemen find themselves at this time. I myself could not but recollect the gay, fluttering figure that the poor Sir Hargrave made at Lady Betty Williams's, perpetually laughing; and compare it with the dark scene he draws in the letter before me: all brought about in so short a space!

There are, I am told, worse men than this: Were those who are but as bad to be apprized of the circumstances of Sir Hargrave's story, as fully as we know them, would they not restect and tremble at his fate, even though that of Merceda (whose exit, I am told, was all horror and despair) and the unhappy Bagenhall were not taken into the shocking account ?

This last wretch, it seems, his spirits and consitution both broken, is gone, nobody knows whither, having narrowly escaped in person from an execution that was out against him, body and goods; the latter all seized upon; his wife and an unhealthy child (and she big with another) turned out of doors; a mortgage in possession of his estate: The poor woman withing but for means to transport herself and child to her mean friends at Abbeville; a collection set on foot in her neighbourhood, for that purpose, failing; for the poor man was neither beloved nor pitied.

These particulars your brother's trusty Richard Saunders told my Sally; and, in considence, that your brother, a little before he came down, being acquainted with her destitute condition, sent her, by him, twenty guineas. Saunders said, he never saw adceper fcene of diffrefs,

The

bou

to t

to t mai

in t

her

feel

Luc

me

grea

His

you

terir

man

beha

ner fo f

wret

do,

him?

ness

ter,

like true

ierve tende

I

The poor woman, on her knees, received the bounty; bleffed the donor; owned herfelf reduced to the last shilling; and that she thought of applying to the parish for affistance to carry her over.

Sir Charles staid not to supper. My grandmamma, being desirous to take leave of her favourite in the morning, has been prevailed upon to repose here to-night.

I must tell you, my Charlotte, all my fears, my feelings, my follies: You are now, you know, my Something arises in my heart, that makes me uneafy: I cannot account to myfelf for this great and fudden change of behaviour in Greville. His extraordinary civilities, even to fondness, to your brother! Are they confistent with his bluftering character and constant threatenings of any man who was likely to fucceed with me? A turn of behaviour fo fudden! Sir Charles and he in a manner strangers, but by character-And did he not fo far profecute his menaces, as to try, wicked wretch! what bluster and a drawn sword would do, and fmart for it? Must not that difgrace incense him?-My uncle fays, he cannot be a true fpirit; witness his compromise with Fenwick, after a rencounter, which, being reported to be on my account, had like to have killed me at the time. And if not a true spirit, may he not be treacherous! God preferve your brother from all fecret, as well as open attacks! And do you, my dear ladies, forgive the tender folly of

Your HARRIET BYRON.

LETTER

The

ould

fore fome

gay, made

hing; in the nort a

Were he ciras we able at fe exit, he unocking constis whisom an goods; unheald out of e: The cansport beville; ood, for was nei-

Richard ce, that n, being ther, by ever faw

LETTER XIV.

Miss Byron. In Continuation.

Friday Morn. Eight o'Clock, OGober 27.

THE apprehensions with which I was so weak as to trouble you, in the conclusion of my last, laid so fast hold of my mind, that going immediately from my pen to my rest, I had it broken and disturbed by dreadful, shocking, wandering, dreams. The terror they gave me several times awakened me! but still as I closed my eyes, I sell into them again. Whence, my dear, proceed these ideal vagaries, which, for the time, realize pain or pleasure to us, according to their hue or complexion, or rather according to our own?

But fuch contradictory vagaries never did I know in my flumbers. Incoherencies of incoherence !-For example—I was married to the best of men: I was not married: I was rejected with fcorn, as a prefumptuous creature: I fought to hide myfelf in holes and corners: I was dragged out of a fubterraneous cavern, which the fea had made when it once broke bounds, and feemed the dwelling of howling and conflicting winds; and when I expected to be punished for my audaciousness, and for repining at my lot, I was turned into an angel of light; stars of diamonds, like a glory, encompassing my head: A dear little baby was put into my arms. Once it was Lucy's; another time it was Emily's; and at another time Lady Clementina's !- I was fond of it beyond expression.

I again dreamed I was married: Sir Charles again was the man. He did not love me. My grandmamma and aunt, on their knees, and with tears, befought him to love their child; and pleaded to him my love of him of long standing, begun in gratitude; and that he was the only man I ever loved.

me rev tha fter he ed 1 not my not mis trec love fhal defi love fhal

lov

bol

In ly; he a Scen Italy wild Eng to the air p my and wour ing c

the c a fou

ratio

to n

blef

poor loved. O how I wept in my dream! My face and bosom were wet with my real tears.

ak

my neken

ng,

nes fell

ele

or

on,

WO

!-

: I s a fin

tern it

of ex-

for ngel

ominto

e it nen-

s a-My.

with aded

n in ever ved ..

My fobs, and my dittrefs and theirs, awakened me; but I dropt alleep, and fell into the very fame reverie. He upbraided me with being the cause that he had not Lady Clementina. He faid, and fo sternly! (I am fure he cannot look so sternly,) that he thought me a much better creature than I prov ed to be: Yet methought, in my own heart, I was not altered. I fell down at his feet. I called it my misfortune that he could not love me: I would not fay it was his fault. It might, perhaps, be his misfortune too!—And then, I faid, love and hatred are not always in one's power. If you cannot love the poor creature who kneels before you, that shall be a cause sufficient with me for a divorce: I defire not to fasten myself on the man who cannot love me. Let me be divorced from you, Sir—You shall be at liberty to assign any cause for the separation, but crime. I will bind myself never, never to marry again; but you shall be free-And God bless you, and her you can love better than your poor Harriet !- Fool! I weep as I write !- What a weak creature I am, fince I have not been well!

In another part of my reverie he loved me dearly; but when he nearly approached me, or I him, he always became a ghoft, and flitted from me. Scenes once changed from England to Italy, from Italy to England: Italy, I thought, was a dreary wild, covered with fnow, and pinched with frost: England, on the contrary, was a country glorious to the eye; gilded with a fun not too fervid; the air perfumed with odours wafted by the most balmy zephyrs from orange-trees, citrons, myrtles, and jessamines. In Italy, at one time, Jeronymo's wounds were healed; at another, they were breaking out afresh. Mr Lowther was obliged to fly the country: Why, did not appear. There was a fourth brother, I thought; and he taking part

He ing.
Harry
lexfen.

Ten

the cer

Harrie

the abi

should

led you His po faid, w was th for the trying tween t him, fp He ha arms of on loo flew.ird what I of us ha happy o muit ha hu milit

him, hi

fion wo

with the cruel Laurana, was killed by the general. Father Marescotti was at one time a martyr for his religion; at another, a cardinal; and talked of for Pope.

But still, what was more shocking, and which so terrified me that I awoke in a horror which put an end to all my reveries (for I slept no more that night)—Sir Charles, I thought, was assassinated by Greville. Greville sled his country for it, and became a vagabond, a Cain, the accursed, I thought, of God and man—I, your poor Harriet, a widow; lest in the most calamitous circumstances that a woman can be in—Good heaven!—But, avaunt, recollection!—Painful, most painful, recollection of ideas so terrible! none of your intrusions—

No more of these horrid, horrid incongruities will I trouble you with! How have they run away with me! I am hardly now recovered from the tremblings into which they threw me!

What, my dear, is the reason, that tho' we know these dreams, these fleeting shadows of the night, to be no more than dreams, illusions of the working mind, fettered and debased as it is by the organs through which it conveys its confined powers to the groffer matter, body, than fleeping inactive, as in the shades of death; yet that we cannot help being strongly impressed by them, and meditating interpretation of the flying vapours, when reason is broad awake, and tells us, that it is weakness to be disturbed at them?—But superstition is, more or less, I believe, in every mind, a natural defect. Happily poifed is that mind, which, on the one hand, is too ftrong to be affected by the flavish fears it brings with it; and, on the other, runs not into the contrary extreme, Scepticism, the parent of infidelity!

You cannot imagine, my dear, the pleasure I had the more for my various dream, when your brother, so amiably serene, love, condescension, assability, hining

fhining in his manly countenance, alighted as I faw him through my window, at the fame time I had the call to breakfast—Dear Sir! I could have faid, Have not you been disturbed by cruel, perplexing, contradictory visions? Souls may be near, when bodies are distant. But are we not one soul? Could yours be unaffected when mine was so much disturbed?—But, thank God, you are come! Come sate, unhart, pleased with me! My fond arms, were the ceremony passed, should welcome you to your Harriet. I would tell you all my disturbances from the absurd allusions of the past night, and my mind should gather strength from the confession of its weakness.

He talked of fetting out early to-morrow morning. His first visit, he said, should be to Sir Harry Beauchamp; his next to Sir Hargrave Pollexsen. Poor Sir Harry! he said, and sighed for him.

t

0

is

n

g r-

is oe

or A.

ne

rs

n-

ad

er,

ng

Tender-hearted man! as Clementina often called your brother: He pitied Lady Beauchamp. His poor Beauchamp!—The lots of a father, he faid, where a great estate was to descend to the son, was the test of a noble heart. He could answer for the fincerity of his Beauchamp's grief, on this trying occasion. Of what joy, said he sitting between two of the best of women, equally fond of him, speaking low], was I, was my father, deprived ! He had allowed me to think of returning to the arms of his paternal love. I make no doubt, but on looking into his affairs (his fon perhaps his fleward) he would have done for his daughters what I have done for my fitters. We should both of us have had a new life to begin, and purfue: A happy one, from my duty and his indulgence, it muit have been. I had planned it out .- With all humility I would, by degrees, have laid it before him, first one part, then another, as his condescenfion would have countenanced me.

Vile, vile reveries!—Must not this young man be the peculiar care of Heaven? How could my disturbed imagination terrify me but in a dream, that the machinations of the darkest mind (as his must be [Greville is not so bad a man] who could meditate violence against virtue so sacredly guarded) could be permitted to prevail against his life!

My grandmamma once, with tears in her eyes, as he talked of taking leave, laid her hand upon his, and instantly withdrew it, as if she thought the action too free. He took her hand, and with both his lifted it to his lips—Venerable goodness! he called her. She looked so proud, and so comforted! every one so pleased!—It is a charming thing to see blooming youth fond of declining age!

They dropt away one by one, and I found myfelf left alone with him. Sweetly tender was his address to me! -- How shall I part with my Harriet? faid he. My eyes were ready to overflow. By a twinkling motion, I thought to disperse over the whole eye the felf-felt too ready tear: My upper-lip had the motion in it, throbbing, like the pulfation which we call the life-blood-I was afraid to fpeak, for fear of burfting into a fit of tenderness; yet was conscious that my very filence was more expressive of tenderness than speech With what delight did his could have been. eager eye (as mine, now and then glancing upward, discovered) meditate my downcast face, and filent concern! Yet fuch was his delicacy, that he took not that notice of it in words, which, if he had, would have added to my confusion: It was enough for him that he faw it. As he was contented filently to enjoy it, I am not forry he did fee it. He merited even open and unreserved alfurances of love. But I the fooner recovered my spirits for his delicate non observance.

mot, confined were, grand man therefore fipeech fihy of delicate Hequen — He jeft—Two faid h

my deathat m grave, as is the labours upon hed perlelation to life (as for his give his are for in light He must (thought)

I wan nerous be gene do what the poor lenge w ror!) in to give Vol.

the eno

not, circumstanced as we were, say I wished for his speedy return; yet, my dear, my purest wishes were, that he would not be long absent. My grandmamma pleases herself with having the dear man for her inmate, on his return: There is therefore no need, for the sake of the world's speech, to abridge my mouth; yet ought we to be shy of giving consequence to a man, who, through delicacy, is afraid to let us see that he assumes consequence from our speechless tenderness for him?

—He restored me to speech, by a change of subject-

is

S,

n

h

d-

10 n-

ng

y-nis

ir-

W.

ver

My

the vas

of nce

ech

his up-

and

he

he

was

on.

liee

ai-

my

not,

Two melancholy offices shall I have to perform, faid he, before I have the honour to attend again my dearest Miss Byron: What must be the heart that melts not at another's woe!-As to Sir Hargrave, I don't apprehend that he is near his end; as is the case of poor Sir Harry. Sir Hargrave labours under bodily pains, from the attack made upon him in France, and from a constitution ruined perhaps by riot; and, having nothing of confolation to give himself from reflections on his past life (as we fee by his letter), his fears are too strong for his hopes. But shall I tell him, if I find it will give him comfort, that you wish his recovery, and are forry for his indifposition? Small crevices let in light fometimes upon a benighted imagination. He must consider his attempt upon your free-will (though not meant upon your honour) as one of the enormities of his past life.

I was overpowered with this instance of his generous goodness. Teach me, Sir, to be good, to be generous, to be forgiving—like you!—Bid me do what you think proper for me to do—Say to the poor man, whose insults upon you in his challenge were then my terror (O how much my terror!) in my name say all that you think will tend to give him confolation.

Vol. VII.

N

Sweet

Sweet excellence! Did I ever hope to meet in woman with fuch an enlargement of heart!——Clementina only, of all the women I ever knew, can be fet in comparison with you: And had she been granted to me, the union of minds between us from difference of religion, could not have been to perfect as yours and mine must be.

Greatly gratified as I was by the compliment, I was forry, methought, that it was made me at the expence of my fex. His words, "Did I ever hope to meet in woman with fuch an enlargement of heart!" piqued me a little. Are not women as capable as men, thought I, of enlarge-ed fentiments?

The leave he took of me was extremely tender. I endeavoured to check my fenfibility. He departed with the bleffings of the whole family, as well as mine. I was forced to go up to my closet: I came not down till near dinner time; I could not; and yet my uncle accompanied my cousin James to Northampton: So that I had no apprehensions of his raillery. One wants trials fometimes, I believe, to make one support one's felf with fome degree of outward fortitude at least. Had my uncle been at home, I should not have dared to have given fo much way to my concern: But foothing and indulgence, fometimes, I believe, add to our imbecility of mind, instead of strengthening our reason.

My uncle made it near eleven at night before he returned with my coufin James. Not one of the company, at his quitting it, feemed inclinable to move. He praised the elegance of the entertainment, and the ease and chearfulness, even to vivacity, of Sir Charles. How could he be so lively!—How many ways have men to divert themselves, when any thing arduous attacks them!—While we poor women!—But your town diversions versions fair to of ourse

the pris
cheap is are in outward women

HE is morning full of as the that is among over ou with the menting I praise to your We of unfatish good co among mamma is retir rich a r

I hop not has his net doubt, my und and less though with roman, wishes he add versions-Your Ranelaghs, Vauxhalls-bid fair to divert fuch of us as can carry ourselves out of ourselves !- Yet are we likely to pay dear for. the privilege; fince we thereby render our fem cheap in the eyes of men, harden our fronts, and are in danger of losing that modesty, at least of outward behaviour, which is the characteristic of women!

tin

can

een

us een

it, I the ever

rge-

not ge-

der.

de-

, as

clo-

; I

my d no

rials

ne's

e at

not cones, I

d of fore

e of

able iter-

n to e fo

vert

em!

di-

ions

Saturday Morning.

not

HE is gone: Gone indeed! Went early this morning. Every mouth was last night, it feems, full of his praises: The men admire him as much as the women. I am glad of it, methinks; fince that is an indirect confession, that there are few among them like him. Not fo much superiority over our fex therefore, in the other, in general, with their enlarged hearts. Have not we a Clementina, a Mrs Shirley, and a long &c? I praise not you, my dear Lady L. and Lady G. to your faces; fo I leave the &c. untranslated.

We do so look upon one another here! Are so unsatisfied with ourselves! We are not half so good company as we were before Sir Charles came among us. How can that be? But my grandmamma has left us too !-- that's one thing. is retired to Shirley-manor, to mortify, after fo rich a regale: Those were her words.

I hope your brother will write to us. Should 1 not have asked him? To be sure he will; except his next letters from Italy should be-But, no doubt, he will write to us. Mr Greville vows to my uncle, he will not come near me. He can lefs and less, he says, bear to think of my marrying; though he does what he can to comfort himfelf with reflecting on the extraordinary merit of the man, who alone, he fays, can deferve me. He wishes the day was over; and the d-l's in him, he adds, if the irrevocableness of the event does N 2 your fan ours. both fan

SIR

not cure him. Mr Fenwick had yesterday his sinal answer from Lucy; and he is to set out on Monday for Carlisle. He declares, that he will not return without a wise: So, thank Heaven, his heart is whole, notwithstanding his double disappointment.

Bur my heart is fet on hearing how the excellent Clementina takes the news of your brother's actual address, and probability of succeeding. I should not think it at all surprising, if, urged as she is to marry a man indifferent to her (the lord of her heart unmarried), she should retract—O my Charlotte!—What a variety of strange, strange, what shall I call them? would result from such a retraction and renewal of claim! I never thought myfelf supersitious; but the happiness before me is so such beyond my merit, that I can hardly flatter myself, at times, that it will take place.

. WHAT think you, my dear, made me write fo apprehensively?-My aunt had just shewn me a letter the had written to you-defiring you-to exercise for us your fancy, your judgment. have no affectation on this subject-I long ago gave affectation to the winds-But fo halty !-So undoubting !- Are there not many possibilities, and fome probabilities, against us?-Something prefumptuous !- Lord bless me, my dear, should any thing happen-Jewels bought, and already presented-Apparel-How would all these preparations aggravate! My aunt fays, he shall be obliged: Lucy, Nancy, Miffes Holles join with her. They long to be exercifing their fancies upon the patterns which they suppose your ladyship and Lady L. will fend down. My uncle hurries my aunt. So as fomething is going forward, he fays, he shall be easy. There is no resisting so strong a tide: So let them take their course. They are all in hafte,

Sir C

Y By choly let I commun Beauchar health, that I has to both.

Sir Ha

mind to made him he could fome rely There the eafier fine derstandihis lady: for joining leave, in this occasion mine, rests, as teare.

I found dish-squa Bartlett haste, my dear, to be considered as relations of your family, and to regard all yours as kindred of Happy, happy the band that shall tie both families together !

HARRIET BYRON,

LETTER XV.

Sir CHARLES GRANDISON, To Miss Byron.

Indon, Monday Night, Oct. 30. OUR humanity, my dear and ever dear Miss Byron, was fo much engaged by the melancholy letter of Sir Hargrave to Dr Bartlett, which I communicated to you, and by the diffress of my Beauchamp, on the desperate state of his father's health, that I know you will be pleafed to hear that I have been enabled to give fome confolation to both.

Sir Harry, who is in town, wanted to open his mind to me with regard to some affairs which made him extremely uneasy; and which, he said, he could not reveal to any body elfe. He shewed some reluctance to entrust the secrets to my bosoni. There shall they ever rest. He has found himself easier since. He rejoiced to me on the good understanding subsisting, and likely to subsist, between his lady and fon. He defired me to excuse him for joining me with them, without asking my leave, in the trusts created by his will: And on this occasion, fending for his lady, he put her hand in mine, and recommended her and her interelts, as those of the most obliging of wives, to my care.

I found Sir Hargrave at his house in Cavendish-square. He is excessively low-spirited. Dr Bartlett visited him at Windsor several times. The

N 3

Doctor

fap. xcelher's . I s fi-

con

will

, his

lhe is her harwhat tracmy-ne is atter ite fo me a

-to . I ago y!lities, thing nould ready repae nbher. n the l Laaunt.

fhall tide: all in haste, Doctor prevailed on him to retain a worthy cler-gyman as his chaplain.

The poor man asked after you, madam. He had heard, he said, that I was soon likely to be the happiest of men: Was it so? He wept at my answer; lamented the wretched hand, as he called it, that he had made of it, blessed as he was with such prosperous circumstances, in the prime of youth; and wished he had his days to come over again, and his company to chuse. Unhappy man! he was willing to remove from himself the load which kay upon him. No doubt but this was the recourse of his companions, likewise, in extremity. He blessed my dearest Miss Byron, when I told him she pitied him. He called himself by harsh, and even shocking names, for having been capable of offending so much goodness.

What subjects are these to entertain my angel with!—But though we should not seek, yet we ought not perhaps to soun them, when they naturally, as I may say, offer themselves to our knowledge.

But another subject ealls for the attention of my dearest, loveliest of women: A subject that will lay a still stronger claim to it than either of the soleron ones I have touched upon. I inclose the letter which contains it. You will be so good as to read it in English to such of our friends as read not Italian.

This letter was left to Mrs Beaumont to dispatch to me; whence its unwished for delay: For she detained it, to send with it an equally obliging one of her own. The contents of this welcome letter, my dearest Miss Byron, will render it unnecessary to wait for an answer to my last to Signor Jeronymo; in which I acquaint him with my actual address, and the hopes I presume to flater myself with. I humbly hope you will think for

angel
my vo for th
Mr culars menti Jeron doubt the in

go he one o closed

Cleme

lent f

my or

day :

Ia

of w

which becau

for h

my h admi

my g

allow

ter.

for th

is but

volen

tina,

fuch l

that i

us, be will r

who i

ler.

He

be

my

with

e of

OVET

nan!

load

the nity.

told

arih,

pable

ingel

t we

na-

our

f my will the e the ds as patch

r the e let-unne-

ignor

n my flat-

think

I am

I am not afraid that one of the most generous of women will be affected with the passage in which Signor Jeronymo expresses his pity for her, because of the affection, he says, I must ever retain for his noble sister. He says right. And it is my happiness, that you, the sister excellence of the admirable Clementina, will allow me to glory in my gratitude to her. You will still more readily allow me so to do, when you have perused this letter. Shall not the man who hopes to be qualified for the supreme love, of which the purest earthly is but a type, and who aims at an universal benevolence, be able to admire, in the mind of Clementina, the same great qualities which shine out with such lustre in that of Miss Byron!

With what pride do I look forward to the visit that several of this noble family intend to make us, because of the unquestionable assurance that they will rejoice in my happiness, and admire the angel who is allowed to take place in my affections of the angel who would not have scrupled to accept of my vows, had it not been, as she expresses herself.

for the intervention of invincible obstacles!

Mrs Beaumont, in her letter, gives me the particulars of the conversation between her and Clementina, almost in the same words with those of Jeronymo, in the letter inclosed. She makes no doubt that Lady Clementina will, in time, yield to the intreaties of her friends in savour of a man against whom, if she can be prevailed upon to forego her wishes to assume the veil, she can have no one objection. You will see, madam, by the inclosed, what they hope for in Italy from us; what Clementina, what Jeronymo, what a whole excellent samily hope for. You know how ardently my own samily wish you to accelerate the happy day: Yours refer themselves wholly to you—

Pardon

Pardon me, my dearest Miss Byron, I will tell' you what are my hopes-They are, that, when I am permitted to return to Northamptonshire, the happy day shall not be postponed three.

And now, lovelieft and dearest of women! allow me to expect the honour of a line, to let me know how much of the tedious month, from last Thursday, you will be so good as to abate. Permit me to fay, that I can have nothing that needs to detain me from the beloved of my heart after Friday next.

If, madam, you infift upon the whole month, I beg to know, out of what part of our nuptial-life, the BAST or the FIRST (happy, as I hope it will be), you would be willing to deduct the week, the fortnight, that will be carried into the blank space of courtship, by the delay? I hope, my dear Miss Byron, that I shall be able to tell you, years and years after we are one, that there is not an hour of those past, or of those to come, that I would abate, or wish to throw into that blank. Permit me fo to call it. The days of courtship cannot be our happiest. Who celebrates the day of their first acquaintance, though it may be remembered with pleasure?-Do not the happy pair date their happiness from the day of marriage? How justly then, when hearts are affured, when minds cannot alter, are those which precede it, to be deemed a blank!

After all, your chearful compliance with my wishes is the great defirable. Whatever shall be your pleasure must determine me. My utmost gratitude will be engaged by the condescension, whenever you shall distinguish the day of the year, distinguished as it will be to the end of my life, that shall give me the greatest bleffing of it, and confirm me

For ever Yours,

CHARLES GRANDISON. LETTER Sign

5t which the wi deliber fifted o to any opinion lay: T termine has fo among she had brother our con ed of t Allth to name her for words a any thir himself, had pat expectat Septemb her, of your re imagina

* See Voi

LETTER XVI.

Signor JERONYMO della PORRETTA, To Sir CHARLES GRANDISON.

[Inclosed in the preceding.]

I GAVE you, my dear Grandison, in mine of the 5th, the copy of a paper written by my sister, which filled us with hopes of her compliance with the wishes of all her family. She took time for deliberation; time was given her; but still she in-

Bologna, Oct. 18. N. S. deliberation; time was given her; but still she insisted on receiving your next letters before she came to any resolution. Mrs Beaumont herself was of opinion, that the dear creature only meditated delay: That also was ours. What, invincibly determined, as she is, to adhere to the resolution she has so greatly taken, can she hope for (said we among ourselves) from the expected letters? For she had declared herself to be so determined to my brother Giacomo, who actually assured her of allour consents to an alliance with you, if she repented of that resolution.

11

I ie.

1

ne.

rds

er

I.

ill'he

ce

ifs

nd

ur

ald mit

be irst ith

ap-

en,

nk!

my be nolt.

ion,

ear,

life,

and

SON.

ER

All this time we offered not to introduce, nor evento name, to her the Count of Belvedere. Awed by her former calamity, and by an excursiveness of imagination, which at times shewed itself in her words and behaviour, we avoided saying or doing any thing that was likely to disturb her. Giacomo himself, though he wanted to return to Naples, had patience with her pretty trisling, beyond our expectation. At last arrived yours of the 29th of September *; kindly inclosing a copy of yours to her, of the same date †. We question not but your reply to mine of the 5th current, is on the road:

^{*} See Vol. vi. Let. xxxiii. P. 227. + Let. xxxii. P. 224.

SI

road; nor that the contents will be such as we may hope for, from considerations of our happiness and your own: But these, we thought without waiting for that, would answer the desired end. I will tell you what was said by every one, on the perusal of both.

Is this the man, faid the general, whom I fometimes fo rudely treated? I rejoice that we were reconciled before he left us. I had formed a notion to his difadvantage; that he was capable of art, and hoped to keep his hold in my fifter's affections, in view of some turn in his favour: But he is the most fingle-hearted of men. These two letters will strengthen our arguments. Clementina, who has more than once declared that the withes him married to an Englishwoman, cannot now, that she will fee there is a woman with whom he thinks he can be happy, wish to stand in his way. These will furnish us with means to attack her in her strongest hold; in her generosity, her delicacy; and will bring to the test her veracity. The contents of these letters will confirm her before halftaken refolution, as in her paper, to oblige us *.. Let Laurana, as the Chevalier fays, go into a nunnery: Clementina will marry, or she is a false girl; and the Sforza women will be disappointed.

My mother applauded you, and rejoiced to hear that there is a woman of your own nation who is capable of making you more happy than her daughter could.

What difficulties, faid the young Marchioness (ever your friend), must a situation so critical have laid him under! A man so humane! And what further difficulties must be have to surmount, in offering to a woman, whom even Olivia, as he says, admires, a hand that has been resused by another?

She is a heart complift favour is them b

I, for

We m Giacom generofi happine

We for She was work) in found fa ark, and the Chetable on

When of the co fpeaking that we and afke tents of i

She re

 other? May this admired woman be propitious to his fuit!

e

i-

it

ed

e,

ece.

on rt,

ns,

he

ers

tho

nim

The

he neie

her cy;

onalf-

15.

to a

is a fap-

hear

ho is

her oness

have what nt, in

y an-

ther!

She must, she must, said the bishop. If she has a heart disengaged, she cannot resuse a man so accomplished. Jeronymo, hasten to be well. If she savour him, we will all go over, and congratulate them both.

I, for my part, faid I, would give up years of life to fee my friend as happy in marriage as he deferves to be.

We must tell Clementina, said my father, as our Giacomo has hinted, that it will not become her generosity to stand in the way of the Chevalier's happiness.

We fent up your letter to our fister, by Camilla. She was busy (Mrs Beaumont sitting by her at work) in correcting the proportion which once you found fault with, in a figure in her piece of Noah's ark, and the rising deluge. A letter, madam, from the Chevalier to me! faid she! and overturned the table on which her materials lay, in haste to take it.

When we thought she had had time to consider of the contents, we fent up to request the favour of speaking with Mrs Beaumont. We owned to her, that we had a copy of your letter to Clementina; and asked, What the dear creature said to the contents of it?

She read it, answered Mrs Beaumont, in her own closet. I thought she was too long by herself. I went to her. She was in tears. O Mrs Beaumont, as soon as she saw me, holding out the letter—See here!—The Chevalier is against me!—Cruel, I could almost say, cruel Grandison!—He turns my own words upon me. I have furnished him with arguments against myself—What shall I do?—I have for many days past repented that I gave under my hand reason to my friends to expect my compliance. I cannot, cannot confirm the hopes I gave!—What shall I do?

I took

I took it, read it, continued Mrs Beaumont, and told her, that the Chevalier's arguments were unanswerable. I dwelt upon some of them.

wept, and was filent.

We then, my dear Grandison, shewed Mrs Beaumont your letter to me. She read it-How, faid fhe, has this excellent young man been embarraffed! I know, from some of my countrymen, the character of the lady whom he mentions: She is an excellent woman! -- May I take up this letter, and read it to Lady Clementina?

By all means, answered the general; and support, dear madam, the contents of both with your weight. It will be from perverseness now if she withstand us. Bid her remember, that she has had once at her feet a kneeling father! Bid her remember the written hopes she has given us!

Mrs Beaumont went up with it. I will give you an account of what my fifter faid as she read it. O Grandison, read it but cursorily: You will more and more admire and love the Clementina, who, before her malady, was always confidered as one of the first of women; and the glory of our house!

She defired to have it in her own hands: Mrs Beaumont, to whose pen we owe the account, locked over her, and followed her eye as she read *.

" And did he still, faid she, after he had got to England, hope for a change in my refolution?"-Heaven knows-She stopt; fighed, and read on.

· He forefaw that my friends would press me to marry!'-I forefaw it too !- I have indeed been preffed; vehemently preffed!

Rather than any other'-Ah, Chevalier !-Why, why, were the obstacles religion and country! None less should have-She stopt-Then, reading to herfelf, proceeded:

· It

" It 1 dison;

Sn

· It w and to fiderate goodnef

There · Four Indeed 1

Giv · It ce ' the arg

' much! · Duty Ah, Gra ' Diffi

here am world, en mentina!

Good lish lady hint in le Beaumon I fuppose bear that ing.

· Beaut lady!] 'e not wishe known C · Loves Clement have no in I preferre me to give heart ca him; and out her ha VOL. V

^{*} See Vol. VI. Letter xxxiii. p. 227-

It was not presumptuous to hope'-No, Grandison; presumptuous it could not be.

'It was juffice to Clementina to attend the event. and to wait for the promised letter.' Kind, confiderate Grandison !- You are all patience, all goodness!-O that-

There fhe stopt. Then proceeding:

Fourth brother! not interested in the event.'-Indeed I did write fo-

" Give up all his hopes!'-Dear Grandison!

' It could not be expected that he should give the argument all its weight.'-He has given it too

Duty to yield to the intreaties of all my friends.

Ah, Grandison!

nd

n-

he

u-iid

d!

ter

ent

to ip-

Juc fhe

had

Te-

you

0 ore

vho,

one

use!

Mrs

ock-

t to

?"__

OR.

ne to

been

r!- oun-

hen, s It

Difficult situations!'-Difficult indeed! And here am I, who have, more than any other in the world, enhanced his difficulties !- Unhappy Clementina!-Then reading on-

Good God! Mrs Beaumont! There is an English lady with whom he was actually-does he not hint in love ?- Nay, then-Take it, take it, Mrs Beaumont! - I can read no further - Compassion only I suppose, brought him over to me !- I cannot bear that !- Yet fnatching it from her, and reading.

Beauty her least perfection'-[Happy English lady!] 'either in my eyes, or her own!'-Have I not wished him such a woman?- 'Had I never known 'Clementina'-How could I be fo captious!

' Loves her with a flame as pure as the heart of Clementina'-Think you, Chevalier! Indeed I have no impurity in my love-My God only have preferred to you: And I blefs God for enabling me to give fo due a preserence!-or, as her own heart can boast.'-Just such a wife did I wish him; and shall I not rejoice, if fuch a one will hold but her hand to make him happy?

VOL. VII. She She fighed often, as she read on; but spoke not, till she came to the words, 'That she was to you, 'what you might truly call, a first love;' a first love, repeated she: He was indeed mine! Permit me to fay, my dear friends, a first and only one.

It became him, he fays, in honour, in gratitude, tho' the difficulties in his way feemed insuperable [and so they must feem], to hold himself in sus pense, and not offer to make his addresses to any other woman.'—Generous, noble Grandison!—He did love me—Discouraged as he was; nay insulted by some of us [Giacomo hears me not, locking round her]; He, the generous Grandison, did love me. She wiped her eyes.

Recovering herfelf, and reading on—See her, Mrs Beaumont—' He thought himself obliged, in honour to me, and to the persons themselves, to decline proposals of advantage.' Surely he must think me an ungrateful creature.

But (reading on) did he 'balance in his mind be tween this lady and me?"—He did. But it was because of his uncertainty with me.

Reading to herself, to the words 'Almost as equal interest,' How is that, faid she, repeating them? -O, it is explained- But when his dear · Clementina' [do I go too fast for your eye, Mrs Beaumont?] 'began to shew signs of recovery, [she fighed] 'and seemed to confirm the hopes! · had given him of my partiality for him,' [model good man!] 'then did I content myfelf,' fays he [look, Mrs Beaumont] 'with wishing another hus band to the English lady, more worthy of he than my unhappy fituation could have made me. -Excellent English lady! If it were in my power I would make you amends for having thared heart with you (fo it feems) that ought, my circum stances and your merit considered, to have been a your own! · Wha him?— that 'he

'Mari

fused h
me.'— she is an ence over man, let this!—S Let me t happy E cate, so

'Thou How car 'She

heart is rethink it a loved that may dep

Grandiso

of life.

'Even fuch a wo like wome with come would cone greater, pear to 'should of See, see, his affect

What a disappointment was my rejection of him?—See, these are his words.—And these too; that he admires me, however, for my motives.

'Marriage, he fays, is not in his power; for there is but one woman in the world, now I have refused him, that he can think worthy of succeeding me.'—What honour he does me! Thank God she is an English woman! O that I had any influence over her! Sweet lady, amiable English woman, let not punctilio deprive you of such a man as this!—Shew her this letter, my good Grandison! Let me transcribe from it, rather for your perusal, happy English lady! certain passages in it, so delicate, so worthy of himself, and of you.

'Thousands, of whom he is not worthy,' he says.

How can he fay fo?

e not,

you,

love,

me to itude,

erable

n fuf-

o any

on!-

ay in-

lock-

n, did

here,

ed, in

to de-

t think

ind be-nost an

is dear

e, Mrs

covery,

hopes modelt

lays he

her hul

y of he ade me

y power

hared !

circum

been a

· Wha

'She has for an admirer every one who knows 'her.'—She shall have me for an admirer, Mrs. Beaumont, if she will accept of my fourth brother. She will accept of him, if she deserves the character he gives her: Let me tell you, lady, that your heart is narrower than that of Clementina, if you think it a diminution to your honour, that he has loved that Clementina. Why cannot you and I be sisters? My love shall be but a sisterly love. You may depend upon the honour of the Chevalier Grandison. He will do his duty in every relation of life. What can be your doubts?

'Even Olivia, he fays, admires you!'—And will fuch a woman stand upon punctilious observances, like women of ordinary consequence having to deal with common men?—O that I knew this lady! I would convince her, that he 'can do justice to her' greater, and to my lesser merits, and yet not appear to be divided by a double love, although he 'should own to all the world, as he says he will,' [See, see, Mrs Beaumont, these are his very words] his affection for Clementina, and glory in it!'

O Mrs Beaumont, how my foul, putting her hand to her forehead, then to her heart, loves his foul! nor, but for one obstacle, that would have shaken my faith, and endangered my salvation (had I got over it), should his foul only have been the object of my love.

Let me but continue fingle, my dear friends; indulge me in the wish that has been so long next my heart; and take not advantage of the hopes I have given you in writing; and I shall pass happily thro' this short life; a life that deserves not the bussle which we make about it. Ask me not either to fet or follow the example you propose to me:' I cannot do either. Unkind Chevalier, why would you strengthen their hands, and weaken mine?—Yet, if it became your justice, what had I but justice to expect from a just man; who has so eminently performed all his own duties, and particularly the filial; which he here calls an article of religion?

When she came to the concluding part of this letter, and your wishes for her perfect recovery, health and welfare, and for the happiness of us all; May every blessing, said she, he wishes us, be his!

Then folding up the letter, and putting it in her bosom, This letter, and that which accompanied it (meaning yours to her), I must read over and over.

Shall I say, my Grandison, that I half pity the lovely Harriet Byron, though her name should be changed to yours? You must love Clementina: Were a sovereign Princess her rival, you must. Clementina! who so generously can give up a love as servent as ever glowed in a virgin heart, on superior motives; motives which regard eternity; and receive joy in the prospect of your happiness with a nother woman, on a persuasion that that woman can make you happier than she herself could, because of a difference in religion.

My fifter chusing to retire to her closet, to re-curio fhe fa

dere, gave prope when you or rance charm nerrl every all this ow been to go till you health tioned Seventhey could be that I were in But (if roman is, for

We marria ture, fi veil de I wish peruse the two letters, Mrs Beaumont knowing our curiofity, put down what had passed; intending, as she faid, to write a copy of it for you.

I, G

How were we all, on perusing it, charmed with our Clementina! I insisted, that nothing, at prefent, should be said to her of the Count of Belvedere, and of our wishes in his favour. My father gave into my opinion. He said, he thought the properest time to mention the Count to her, was, when we had an answer to the letter I wrote to you on the 5th current, if that could give us assurances that you had made your addresses to the charming Byron, and were encouraged. The general was impatient; but he acquiesced, on finding every one come into my motion: but said, that if all this lenity did not do, he must beg leave to have his own measures pursued.

Some little particularity has appeared in the dear creature fince I have written the above. She has been exceedingly earnest with her mother, to use her interest with my father, and us, to be allowed to go to England: But desires not the permission till you are actually married. She pleads my health, because of the salutary springs you mentioned to me.

Several other pleas she offered; but, to say truth, they carried with them such an air of slightiness, that I am loth to mention them: Yet all of them were innocent, all of them were even laudable. But (shall I say?) that some of them appeared too romantic for a settled brain to be so earnest, as she is, for having them carried into execution.

We have no doubte but all her view is, to avoid marriage, by fuch a strange excursion. Dear creature, said the bishop, speaking of her just now, the veil denied her, she must have some point to carry:

I wish we saw less rapidity in her manner.

I, Grandison, for my part, remember how muca.

had obint my

have

his

ave

thro' uitle er to e:' I

jufemiticu-

s letlealth May le of n her nied it over.

Were emenis ferperior and reith awoman to red, be.

she and we all suffered by denying her the farewel visit from you, on your taking leave of Italy the time before the last.

But we think an expedient has offered, that will divert her from this wildness, as I must call it: Mrs Beaumont has requested, that she may be allowed to take her with her to Florence for some weeks. Clementina is pleased with our readiness to oblige them both; and they will soon go.

But all this time she is uniform and steady in her wishes for your marriage. She delights to hear Mrs Beaumont talk of the perfections of the lady to whom we are all desirous of hearing you are united. You had written, it seems, to Mrs Beaumont, a character given of this young lady by Olivia, upon a personal knowledge of her. Mrs Beaumont shewed it to Clementina.

How generously did the dear creature rejoice in it! Just such a woman, said she, did I wish for the Chevalier. Olivia has shewn greatness of mind in this instance. Perhaps I thought too hardly of Olivia. Little did I think I should ever have requested a copy of any-thing written by Olivia. Ill-will disables us from seeing those beauties in the person who is the object of it, which would otherwise strike us to her advantage. You must oblige me, added she, with a copy of this extract.

08. 20. N. S.

You will be pleased, I know, my Grandison, with every particular that shall tend to demonstrate the pleasure the dear Clementina takes in hoping you will be soon the happy man we all wish you to be.

This morning the came down with her work into my chamber. I invite myfelf, Jeronymo, faid the. I will fit down by you, till you are disposed to rife. She then, of her own motion, began to talk of you; and I, putting it to her (as her mother did yesterday), whether she would be really glad glad answe hoped it was shall b be per compt entrea herfelf be har doubte one's l fo ren compl cruelty gentle know

My
fo glor
you to of duty fustain
you m

Ah compli know i you no conflict married let me my wit dulged tiremen happy.

Mrs on her longer. the just Mrs Be glad to hear of your nuptials, received the fame answer the then made; she sincerely should: She hoped the next letters would bring an account that it was fo. But then, Jeronymo, continued the, I shall be teazed, persecuted. Let me not, my brother, be perfecuted. I don't know, whether downright compulsion is not more tolerable than over-earnest entreaty. A child, in the first instance, may contract herfelf, as I may fay, within her own compass; may be hardened: But the entreaty of fuch friends as undoubtedly means one's good, dilates and difarms one's heart, and makes one wish to oblige them; and fo renders one miserable, whether we do or do not Believe me, Jeronymo, there is great comply. cruelty in persuasion, and still more to a soft and gentle temper than to flubborn one: Perfuaders know not what they make fuch a person suffer.

My dearest Clementina, said I, you have shewn so glorious a magnanimity, that it would be injuring you to suppose you are not equal to every branch of duty. God forbid that you should be called to sustain an unreasonable trial—In a reasonable one, you must be victorious.

11

:

ne

1s

er

ar dy

re

uli-

u-

he

in

of

re-

the er-

ige

with

the

you

be.

in-faid ofed

a to

her

glad

Ah Jeronymo! How little do I deferve this fine compliment!—Magnanimity, my brother!—You know not what I yet, at times, fuffer!—And have you not feen my reason vanquished in the unequal consict? She wept. But let the Chevalier be married, and to the angel that is talked of: and let me comfort myself, that he is not a sufferer by my witholding my hand—And then let me be indulged in a single life, in a place consecrated to retirement from the vain world, and we shall both be happy.

Mrs Beaumont came to feek her. I prevailed on her to fit down, and my fifter to flay a little longer. I extolled my fifter to her: She joined in the just praise. But one act of magnanimity, faid Mrs Beaumont, feems wanting to complete the greatness

greatness of your character, my love, in this particular case of the expected marriage of the Chevalier Grandison.

What is that, Mrs Beaumont ?- all attention.

You fee his doubts, his apprehensions of appearing worthy of the lady so highly spoken of, because of that delicacy of situation (which, as you observe, Olivia also hints at) from what may be called a divided love: Miss Byron may very well imagine, as his love of you commenced before he knew her, that she may injure you if she receive his addresses: You had the generosity to wish, when you were reading those his apprehensions, that you knew the lady, and were able to influence her in his favour.

Well, Mrs Beaumont-

Can I doubt that Lady Clementina is able to fet her name to the noble fentiments, that fo lately, in reading his letter, flowed from her lips?

What would Mrs Beaumont have me to do?

Let me lead you to your own closet. Pen, ink, and paper, are always before you there. Assume your whole noble self, and we shall see what that assumption will produce.

All that is in my power, faid she, to promote the happiness of a man who has suffered so much through my means, it is my duty to do.

She gave her hand to Mrs Beaumont, who led her to her closet, and left her there. The following is the result. Generous, noble creature!—But does it not shew a raised imagination! especially in he disposition of the lines?

Best of Men!
Best of Women!
Best of Women!

CLEMENTINA wishes it!

GRANDISON, Lady, will make you happy.
Be it your study to make Him so!—

Happy as CLEMENTINA would have made him, Had

The

mon prop Gran very lady fince him, dentl portu In th you a them

celebi

The I. T. JER. J. Hon

Had not obstacles invincible intervened.
This will lessen her regrets:

For,
His Felicity, Temporal and Eternal, Was ever the wish next her heart.
GOD be merciful to you both,
And lead you into his paths:

Then will everlasting Happiness be your portion.

Be it the portion of CLEMENTINA—

Pray for her,

1-rfe

bal-

a-

he

ive

fh,

115, nce

fet, in nk,

ıme

that note

nuch

led low.

But

ly in im,

Had

That, after this transitory life is over, She may partake of Heavenly bliss:

(Not a Stranger to you, Lady, Here) Rejoice with you both HEREAFTER.

CLEMENTINA della PORRETTA.

The admirable creature gave this to Mrs Beaumont: Send this, madam, faid the, if you think proper, to your friend and my friend, the Chevalier Grandison. Tell him, that I shall think myself very happy, if it may serve as a testimonial to the lady whose merits entitle her to his love, of my sincere wishes for their mutual happiness: Tell him, that at present I wish for nothing more ardently, than to hear of his nuptials being celebrated.

Dear Grandison! let your next give us an opportunity to selicitate you on this desireable event. In this wish joins every one of a family to whom you are, and ever will be, dear. Witness, for them all,

The Marquis and Marchioness della Porretta.

1. T. R. Bishop of Nocera.

JERONYMO della PORRETTA.

J. P. M. MARESCOTTI.

HORTENSIA BEAUMONT.

LETTER

LETTER XVII.

Miss Byron, To Sir Charles Grandison.

Wednesday, Nov. 1.

HOW, Sir, have the contents of your friend Jeronymo's letter affected me!—I am more and more convinced, that, however distinguished my lot may be, Clementina only can deserve you. What a vain creature must I be, if I did not think so! And what a disingenuous one, so thinking, if I did not acknowledge it!

I cannot, Sir, misconstrue your delicate sensibilities. My own teach me to allow for yours.

'Best of men,' I can, I do, with Clementina, think you: But Harriet's ambition will be gratified, in being accounted second to Her.

And does Clementina ' with us ONE !'-- Most noble, most generous of women!

Grandison, you fay, will make me happy.'

But ah, my lovely pattern, can Harriet be happy, even with her Grandison, if you are not so?"

Believe me, LADY! your happiness will be effential to hers.

- God give you happiness! Harriet prays for it! my next to Divine Monitress, it shall be my study
- to make him happy!
 But, most excellent of women! have you regrets? Regrets, which can only be lessened by the joy you will have in his happiness!—And with another!

· Superlative goodness!

Why, why, when he would allow to you the exercise of your religion, and only insists on the like liberty, are the obstacles you hint at invinci-

. bie!

O Sir! I can pursue this subject no farther. Thus far an irresistible impulse carried me.

How

wer make cafe to have a sive for la

but

fo a your a lite? ask Las lemma week what term

A

poor heart beg t that and i

the w

How should I be able to stand before this lady, were the visit she was so earnest to be allowed to make to England to take place; yet, in such a case, with what pleasure should I pay my reverence to her mind in her person!

be ef-

it!

by

the

the inci-

her.

How

And does SHE, do her family, do you, Sir, wish us speedily ONE ?- Are you not fatisfied with the given month ?- Is not a month, Sir, your declaration fo late made, a short term? (and let me ask you, but within parentheses, do you not, on an occasion fo very delicate, in your limited three days after your return to us, treat the not-infensible Harriet a little more-Help me, Sir, to a word-than might have been expected from a man to very polite?)—And can you fo generously, yet so seriously, ask me, from which parts of the nuptial life, the LAST (what a dreadful idea do you raife in that folemn word!) or the First, I would deduct the week's or fortnight's fupposed delay?-O Sir! what a way of putting it is this !- Thus I answer - 'From neither!' My honour is your honour. Determine You, most generous of men, for

Your HARRIET BYRON.

LETTER XVIII.

Miss Jervois, To Sir Charles Grandison.

You will think your ward very bold to address you by letter; especially as she is a very poor inditer, and as you are in town: But her heart is in trouble, and the must write; and must beg the favour of you, the most indulgent guardian that ever poor Orphan had, to answer her by pen and ink. For whether you can forgive her or not, the will be equally incapable of bearing your goodness.

ness, or your displeasure. How weakly I express myfelf! I find I shall write worse to you, than to any body elfe: And why? Because I wish to write best. But I have great awe, and no genius. I am a poor girl in every fense; as you shall hear by and I hope you won't be very angry with me. !f you are, I shall be worse than poor-I shall be miserable.

But to come before my guardian as a delinquent, when I have ambition enough to wish to shine in his eyes, if so it could have been !—If you were to acquit me, I shall have had great puishment in that thought.

But to open my troubled heart to you-Yet how shall I? I thought to tell it you yesterday; but for my life I could not. Did you not observe me once, Sir, hanging upon the back of your chair, unable to stand in your fight? O how I felt my face glow !- Then it was I thought to have spoken my mind; but you were fo kind, fo good to me, I could not, might I have had the world. You took my hand-I shall be very bold to repeat it; but am always fo proud of your kind notice, that I can't help it: And you faid, drawing me gently to you, Why keeps my Emily behind me? What can I do for my Emily? Tell me, child: Is there any thing I can do for my ward?" Yet, though the occasion was so fair, I could not tell you. But I thall tire you, before I come to the point (to the fault, I should fay) that has emboldened me to write.

This then is the truth of the matter:

My poor mother, Sir, is very good now, you know. You have taken from her all her cares about this world. She and her husband live together happily and elegantly: They want for nothing; and are grown quite religious: So that they have leifure to think of their fouls' good. They make me cry for joy, whenever I go to them. They pray for you, and

and they

Bu

was a wher mire contri ter ha that choug thoug one ti at an than years, my gu one's my me dy, by chario horfes I befpo my ow to fpar after w it on: I will ! wards i band ca airing o pearanc is intitl grudge mother her, you

But h came me

for past

the look

and heap bleffings upon you; and cry to think they ever offended you.

r

ce

ly

I

ok

m n't

11, do

ny

oc-

tI

the

to

OW.

this pily

are

e to

you,

and

But, Sir, I took it into my head, knowing it was a valt way for them to go from Soho to fomewhere in Moorfields, to hear the preacher they admire fo much, and coach-hire, and charities, and contributions of one kind or other (for their minifter has no establishment), and old debts paying off, that at present, though I believe they are frugal enough, they can't be much aforehand-So. thought I, shall I ride in my guardian's coach at one time, in Lady G.'s at another, in Lady L.'s at another, though fo much better able to walk than my poor mother, while the is growing into years, and when infirmities are coming on, and my guardian's example before me, fo opening to one's heart ?- I ventured, therefore, unknown to my mother and her husband, unknown to any body, by way of furprise, to bespeak a plain near chariot, and agreed for a coachman and a pair of horses; for I had about 120 guineas by me when I bespoke it. Out of this, thought I (which is my own money, without account), I shall be able to spare enough for the first half year's expences; after which they will be in circumstances to keep it on: And as quarters come round, thought I. I will stint myself, and throw in something towards it; and then my poor mother and her hufband can go to ferve God, and take fometimes an airing or fo where they please, and make an appearance in the world as the mother of the girl who is intitled to fo large a fortune. And I don't grudge Mr O'Hara; for he is vastly tender of my mother now: Which mast be a great comfort to her, you know, Sir, now she is come to be forry for past things, and apt to be very spiritless when the looks back—Poor dear woman!

But here, Sir, was the thing: Believing it became me, as Lady L. Lady G. and Mrs Pleanor Vol. VII. P Grandison, Grandison, intended to shew their respect to you on a certain happy occasion, by new cloaths, to show mine the same way; I went to the mercer's, and was so tempted by two patterns, that, not knowing which to chuse, I bought of both, not thinking at the time of the bespoken chariet. To be sure I ought to have consulted Lady L. or Lady G.; but, soolish creature as I was, I must be for furprising them too with my fine fancy.

Then I laid out a good deal more than I intended in millinery matters; not but I had pennyworths for my penny: But the milliners are so very obliging, they shew one this pretty thing, and that fashionable one, and are so apt to praise one's taste, and one is so willing to believe them, and be thought mighty clever, that there is no resisting the vanity they raise. I own all my folly: I ever will, Sir, when I am guilty of any greater silliness than ordinary; for I have no bad heart, I hope, though I am one of the slowers I once heard you compare some of us to, who are late before they blow into discretion.

But now, good Sir, came on my diffres: For the bespoken chariot was ready, ready sooner by a fortnight than I expected. I thought my quarter would be nearer ended; and I had made a vast hole in my money. I pulled up a courage; I had need of it, and borrowed fifty guineas of Lady G.; but, from this foolish love of surprises, cared not to tell her for what. And having occasion to pay two or three bills (I was a thoughtless creature to be sure) which, unluckily, though I had asked for them before, were brought in just then, I borrowed another sum, but yet told not Lady G. for what; and the dear Lady, I believe, thought me an extravagant girl: I saw she did by her looks.

But, however, I caused the new chariot to be brought privately to me. I went in it, and it car-my p

when pon it yet M matte But y fed m

It is I have tion at angry fiderat you no chiding But of me, this raff ceited fi fies me) rity; the now is! and reff will not then will fiderate What is cares?

And ropen beit biame the it, as the extremely without my vanity ried me to Soho; and there, on my knees, made my present to my mother.

But do you think, Sir, that she and Mr O'Hara, when I confessed that I had not consulted you upon it, and that neither Lady L. nor Lady G. nor yet Mrs Eleanor Grandison, knew a syllable of the matter, would accept of it? They would not: But yet they both cried over me for joy, and bles sed me.

It is put up somewhere—And there it lies, till I have obtained your pardon first, and your direction afterwards. And what shall I do, if you are angry at your poor ward, who has done so inconfiderate a thing, and run herself into debt?

Chide me, honoured Sir, if you pleafe. Indeed you never yet did chide me. But yours will be chidings of love, of paternal love, Sir.

But if you are angry with me more than a day, if you give me reason to believe you think meanly of me, though, alas! I may deserve it; and that this rashness is but a prelude to other rash or conceited steps (for that is the sear which most terrifies me), and is therefore to be resented with severity; then will I say to my dear Miss Byron, that now is!—And if she cannot soften your displeasure, and restore me to your good opinion—(Mere pardon will not be enough for your truly penitent ward) then will I say, Burst, heart! Ingrateful, inconsiderate Emily, thou hast offended thy guardian! What is there lest in this life that is worthy thy cares?

And now, Sir, I have laid my troubled heart open before you. I know you will not fo much biame the thing, even should you not approve of it, as the manner; doing it (after you had been so extremely generous and considerate to my mother) without consulting either you or your sisters. O my vanity and conceit! They, they have missed

P 2

me.

it car-

11 0

s, ot

ot

e dy

70

n.

ny-

ve-

and ne's

l be ing

ever

ness

ope,

you

they

For

by a arter

a vaft

I had

v G.;

d not

o pay

ure to

ed for rrow-

what;

an ex-

me. They never shall again, whether you forgive me or not.

But, good, indulgent, honoured Sir, my guardian, my protector, let not my punishment be the reversing of the gracious grant which my heart has been so long wishing to obtain, and which you had consented to, of being allowed to live immediately in your own eye, and in the presence of my dear Miss Byron, that now is. This rash action should rather induce you to confirm than reverse it. And I promise to be very good. I ever loved her. I shall add shial honour, as I may say, to my love of her. I never will do any thing without consulting her; and but what you, the kindest guardian that ever poor Orphan had, would wish me to do.

And now, Sir, honour me with a few lines from your own hand; were it but to shew me that this impertinence has not so far tried you, as (should you think it just to banish me from your presence for some time) to make you discourage applications to you, by pen and ink, from, Sir,

Your truly forrowful ward,

And ever-obliged and grateful

EMILY JERVOIS.

LETTER XIX.

Sir CHARLES GRANDISON, To Miss JERVOIS.

Wednesday, Nov. 1.

I WRITE to the dear child of my tenderest cares, because she requests me to write; else I had hastened to her in person, to comfort her doubting heart; and to assure her, that nothing but a fault premeditated and persisted in, that might have affected her present or future reputation, and consequently half tenti with led b prife could heart.

conf

occafi and M me in dutifu that, a your a nion of them, your d for her join wi accepta Jervois to pay to tention, I love, I fint you to the furis but a litherefore pence you little to to affure with his l

will on flance o

I incl

consequently her happiness, could make me, for half an hour, offended with her. Your good intentions, my dear child, will ever be your security with me. Men, as well as women, are often misled by their love of surprises: But the greatest surprise my Emily could give me would be, if she could do any one thing that would shew a faulty heart.

Once more, my dear, pay your duty to your mother, in the chariot which has been the causeless occasion of fo much concern to you; and tell her, and Mr O'Hara, that they have greatly obliged me in declining the acceptance of the chariot, for dutifully presented till they knew my mind: But: that, not so much in the compliment paid to me as your guardian, as because it has given me an opinion of their own generofity and diferetion. them, that I greatly approve of this instance of your duty to your mother, and of your regard, for her fake, to Mr O'Hara: Tell them, that I join with my ever-amiable ward in requesting their acceptance of it; and do you, my dear, tell Miss Jervois, that I greatly honour her for this new inflance of the goodness of her heart.

I inclose a note, and will, to make you easy, carry it to its proper account, that will enable you to pay the debt which you, with so dutiful an intention, have contracted.—Forgive you, my dear! I love, I admire you for it. I will not have you slint yourself, as you call it, in order to contribute to the future expence of the chariot. The present is but a handsome one respecting your fortune. Be therefore, for your mother's life, the whole expence yours; and it may possibly contribute not a little to the ease of mind of both (as they now live together not unhappily) if you have the goodness to assure Mr O'Hara, that you are so well satisfied with his kind treatment of your mother, that you will, on supposition of the continuance of it, before

P 3

Vov. 1. nderest
e; essert her nothing might n, and uently

rt

111

e-

on

it.

er.

ove

ar-

me

rom this bluc

ence

ions

015.

015.

fore you enter into engagements which may limit your own power, or make your will dependent on that of another perfon, secure a handsome provision for him, for his life, in case he survive your mother.

I thank you, my dearest ward, for the affection you express for my beloved Miss Byron. She loves you so tenderly, that it would have been a concern to me, had she not engaged your love and considence. You highly oblige me by promising to consult her on all material occasions. The benefit you will receive from her prudent advice and example, and the delight she will receive from your company, will be a happiness to all three. My Emily may depend upon every thing to make it completely so, that shall be in the power of

Her faithful friend and fervant,

CHARLES GRANDISON.

LETTER XX.

Mifs JERVOIS, To Sir CHARLES GRANDISON.

Thursday, Nov. 2.

A FEW lines, Sir: a very few—Not to shew my vanity, my pride, in being allowed to write to my guardian; not to presume to draw him into an intercourse of letters. No, Sir; I write only to thank you, which I do a thousand thousand times, for the ease, the joy you have given to my heart. O how I dreaded to open your letter! But I could not have expected it to be so very indulgent to a faulty girl. Not one rebuke! Oh Sir! how very good you are! And to send me the money to clear my debts! To bid me make my present! In so gracious a manner to bid me! And to put me upon promising a provision for life for Mr O'Hara, if thi ly of the OI the min fant ever cry com ing time thou ra is of al dian

if l

Th

and

I H

nit

on

VI-

our ion

ves

ern

nfi-

to efit

ex-

our

E.

e it

SON.

N.

00. 2:

Thew

ed to

whim write ufand to my

! But ulgent

! how ney to

at! In ut me

Hara,

if he furvive my mother; which will prevent their thinking themselves obliged to live more narrowly while they are together, in order to fave in view of fuch an unhappy event !- I flew to them with the good news-I read the whole letter to them. O how their hearts bleffed you at their eyes, for they could not prefently speak; and how my tears mingled with theirs! O Sir, you made us all infants !- I, for my part, am still a baby !- Did I ever cry fo much for grief, as you have made me ery for joy ?- It is well fomething now and then comes to check one's joy; there would be no bearing it else. But I shall encroach on your precious Thank you, thank you, Sir, a hundred thousand times. My mother is happy! Mr O'Hara is happy! Miss Byron will soon be the happiest of all human beings, thank God !- You, my guardian, must be one of the happiest of men! May every body else be happy that you wish to be so ! and then how happy will be, good Sir,

> Your dutiful ward, and obliged fervant, ever to be commanded,

> > EMILY JERVOIS.

They fay you fet out for Northamptonshire next Monday or Tuesday at furthest. Lord bless me! Lord bless you! I would say—And bless every body you love!—Amen!—for ever and ever.

LETTER XXI.

Miss Byron, To Lady G.

Thursday, Nov. 2.

I HAVE laid before you, my dear Lady G. the letters of your brother and Signor Jeronymo; as also my answer to that of your brother: My spirits never were so unequal. All joy at one time, apprehension at another, that something will still happen.—Greville is reported to be so gloomy, so silent! He hates me, he says.—And here, unexpectedly, is poor Mr Orme returned. Amended in his health a little, those who have seen him says and he thinks so—I am glad of it. And here are we sitting in judgment, my aunt lady-president, on the patterns you have sent: My uncle too will have his opinion to be taken—And Mr Deane, who threatened he would not come to Selby-house till the settlements were to be signed, or read—I cannot tell what—will be here on Saturday.

Mr Orme has defired leave to vifit me to-morrow. My uncle to harries my fpirits, not with his raillery, as he used to do—but with his joy. He talks of nothing but the coming down of your brother, and the limited three days after, and numbers the days, nay, the hours as they fly: For he supposes Sir Charles will be here on Monday at surthest; and calls that a delay of particular grace and favour to me. For has he not told you, faid he, that nothing after Friday can, on his part, detain him from us?

But, Lady G. will he not write to my last before he comes? Say my uncle what he pleases, your brother can't be down before Saturday se'ennight at foonest.

Your fancy and Lady L.'s determine us. My aunt has undertaken this province: She therefore will write to you what the thinks fit. Is there not too much glare in the flowered filver, as you defcribe it? Don't, my dear, let me be a bride in a masquerade habit. Humility becomes persons of some degree. We want not glare: We are known to be able to afford rich dresses. Something must be done, I grant, on our appearance; for an appearance pear count in to little be for the of they a Que port from firms his in clima find l my h ampl expre Grev

to be

pose find plaud have draw indee happe therbecau stitiou he ga

W

dy's. dam, py ma Fenwi My

one

will

my,

un-

nd-

him

nere

ent,

Will

who till

can-

nor-

his.

He

your

and fly:

Ion-

ticu-

told on on

be-

your night

My

efore

e not u de-

in a ns of nown

mult

n ap-

rance

pearance we must not dispense with here in the country, whatever you people of quality may do in town. But let me not, I beseech you, or as little as possible, be marked out for a lustre; and be so good as to throw in a hint to this purpose to the dear busy girls here, as from yourselves; for they are exercising their fancies, as if I were to be a Queen of the May. Your authorities will support me, if they give me cause to differ in opinion from them.

Miss Orme has just been with me. She confirms her brother's amendment. She is forry that his impatience has brought him over, when the climate was so favourable to him. She says, I shall find him sincerely disposed to congratulate me on my happy prospect, of which she has given him ample particulars. He could not, she says, but express himself pleased, that neither Fenwick nor Greville, but that one of so superior a character is to be the man.

What greater felicity can a young creature propose to herself, in the days of courtship, than to find every one in her family, and out of it, applauding her choice? Could I, a few weeks ago, have thought—But hushed be vanity! Pride, withdraw! Meek-eyed humility stand forth!—Am I indeed to be the happiest of women? Will nothing happen—O no, no! Heaven will protect your brother—Yet this Greville is a trouble to me. Not because of my horrid dream; I am not so superstitious as to let them disturb me: But from a hint he gave Miss Orme.

She met him this morning at a neighbouring lady's. He thus accosted her: I understand, madam, that your brother is returned. He is a happy man. Just in time to see Miss Byron married. Fenwick, a dog! is gone to how at Carlisle on the occasion. Your brother, Miss Orme, and I have nothing nothing to do but howl in recitative to each other here.

My brother, Mr Greville, answered Miss Orme, I am sure will behave like a man on the occasion: Nor can you have reason to howl as you call it. Sir Charles Grandison is your particular friend, you know.

True, Mifs Orme, affecting to laugh off this hit, I thought I could have braved it out; but now the matter comes near, it slicks here, just here, pointing to his throat: I cannot get it through my gizzard. Plaguy hard of digestion! making faces in his light way.

But will your brother, proceeded he, be contented to stay within the noise of the bells, which will (in a few days perhaps) be set a ringing for ten miles round! Sir Charles drives on at a d—nable rate, I hear. "But he must let me die decently, I can tell him: We will not part for ever with the flower of our country, without conditions." Shall you see the Syren, madam! If you do, tell her, that I have no chance for peace but in hating her heartily. But (whispering Miss Orme) bid her not to be too secure.

I was strangely struck with these last words, for my spirits were not high before. I repeated them, I dwelt upon them, and wept.—Fool that I was! But I soon recollected myself, and defired Miss Orme not to take notice of my tender folly.

Friday.

I have had a visit from Mr Orme. He has given me some pleasure. I added not to his melancholy. He asked me several interesting questions, which I would not have answered any other man, as I told him. I shall always value Mr Orme. Your brother is the most generous of men: But were he not so very generous, he ought to allow for my civility to this worthy man, since I can applicated plaud Cleme must nour

a man if this a won woma
This but I Harri
I repl fent, i tion to

Grand pride, the pra fing or manne his: It he left in our we fon

Luc

Ho

before there if am of to Shiris not S grandmand coring down foonest, things.

other to

plaud him with my whole heart for loving the noble Clementina. What a narrow-hearted creature must I be if I did not?—But as a woman's honour is of a more delicate nature, I believe, than a man's, with regard to perfonal love; fo perhaps, if this be allowed me, a man may be as jealous of a woman's civility (in general cases I mean) as a woman may be of a man's love to another object. This may found strange at first hearing, Lady G. but I know what I mean.—No body else does, Harriet, perhaps you will say.—But they would, I reply, if I were to explain myself; which at present, if you apprehend me not, I have no inclination to do.

How did this worthy man praise Sir Charles Grandison! He must see that my pride, no, not pride, my gratitude, was raised by it, as well to the praiser as the praised. He concluded with a blessing on us both, which he uttered in a different manner from what that Balaam-Greville uttered his: It was followed with tears, good man! and he lest me almost unable to speak. How grateful in our ears are the praises bestowed on those whom we fondly love!

er ie,

1:

it.

OH

ut,

WO

re,

my ces

on-ich

for

: a die

for out

am!

for per-

RE.

hem.

was!

Mils

as gi-

ielan-

tions,

man,

Orme.

: But

allow in ap-

plaud

Lucy thinks I had best go to my grandmamma's before he comes down, and that he should visit me there from Selby-house. Neither my aunt nor I am of this opinion; but that he should himself go to Shirley-manor, and visit us from thence. For is not Selby-house my usual place of residence? My grandmamma will be delighted with his company and conversation. But as he cannot think of coming down before the latter end of next week at the soonest, it is time enough to consider of these things. Yet can a young creature, the awful solemnity so near, and with a man whom she prefers to all others, find room in her head for any other topic!

I have

I have a letter from good Mrs Reeves. She and my cousin are so full of this agreeable subject, that they invite themselves down to us; and hope we will excuse them for their earnestness on this occa-They are prodigiously earnest. I wonder my cousin can think of leaving her little boy. aunt fays, there is no denying them. How fo !-Surely one may excuse one's self to friends one so dearly loves. Your presence, my Charlotte, I own, would be a high fatisfaction to me: Yet you would be a little unmanageable I doubt. There can be no hope of Lady L.'s: But if there were, neither the nor any body elfe could keep you orderly.—Poor dear Emily !- My aunt wishes that we could have had her with us: But, for her own fake, it must not be. How often do I revolve that reflection of your brother's, that, in our happiest prospects, the fighing heart will confess imperfection !- But I will not add another word, after I have affured you, my dearest ladies, that I am, and ever will be,

Your grateful and most affectionate humble servant,

HARRIET BYRON.

LETTER XXII.

Sir CHARLES GRANDISON, To Miss Byron.

R ECEIVE, dearest, loveliest of women, the thanks of a most grateful heart for your invaluable favour of Wednesday last. Does my Harriet (already, methinks, I have sunk the name of Byron into that of Grandison), do Mrs Shirley, Mrs Selby think, that I have treated one of the most delicate of semale minds indelicately, in the wish (not the prescription) I have presumed to signify nify days thire, great unge in th was 1 from me, t mine grant have will. was n own a bout y a fpee he be Selbythe ha forwar borne my reg obliged Our go them. of prefe Tuefda the haj fucceed turn.

should

Our

If I Tuefda prefent pouring invalua

Vol.

nify to the beloved of my heart, that within three days after my permitted return to Northamptonthire. I may be allowed to receive at the altar the greatest bleffing of my life? I would not be thought ungenerous. I fignified my wifhes; but I told you in the fame letter, that your chearful compliance was to me the great desireable. In every thing, from the date of the condescending letter before me, to the last of my life, shall your wishes determine mine. I will have your whole heart in the grant of every request I make to you, or you shall have the chearful acquiescence of mine with your Permit me to fay, that the family punctilio was not out of my thoughts when I expressed my own ardent wishes to you. Does not the world about you expect, on the return of the happy man, a speedy solemnization? I imagined, that whether he be permitted to make the place of his abode Selby-house or Shirley-manor, you would not that the happy day should be long deferred, which should give him rank as one of the dear family.

Our equipages, my dearest life, are all in great forwardness. In tenderness to you, I have forborne to consult you upon some parts of them, as my regard for your judgment would otherwise have obliged me to do. The settlements are all ready. Our good Mr Deane is ready to attend you with them. Allow me then to do myself the honour of presenting myself before you at Selby-house, on Tuesday next. I will leave it to you to distinguish the happiest day of my life, whether within the succeeding three, four, sive, or even six of my return.

If I have not your commands to the contrary, Tuesday morning then, if not Monday night, shall present to you the most ardent and sincere of men, pouring out on your hand his grateful vows for the invaluable favour of Wednesday's date, which I Vol. VII.

vant,

and

hat

we cca-

der

My

!-

ie fo

wn,

ould

n be ither

Poor

have

must

on of pects,

-But

Tured

r will

ON

Nov. 3.

In, the our inoy Harname of Shirley, of the in the to fig-

nity

I have a letter from good Mrs Reeves. She and my cousin are fo full of this agreeable subject, that they invite themselves down to us; and hope we will excuse them for their earnestness on this occa-They are prodigiously earnest. I wonder my cousin can think of leaving her little boy. My aunt fays, there is no denying them. How fo !-Surely one may excuse one's self to friends one so dearly loves. Your prefence, my Charlotte, I own, would be a high fatisfaction to me: Yet you would be a little unmanageable I doubt. There can be no hope of Lady L.'s: But if there were, neither the nor any body elfe could keep you orderly.-Poor dear Emily! - My aunt wishes that we could have had her with us: But, for her own fake, it must not be. How often do I revolve that reflection of your brother's, that, in our happiest prospects, the fighing heart will confess imperfection !- But I will not add another word, after I have affured you, my dearest ladies, that I am, and ever will be,

Your grateful and most affectionate humble servant,
HARRIET BYRON.

LETTER XXII.

Sir CHARLES GRANDISON, To Miss BYRON.

R ECEIVE, dearest, loveliest of women, the thanks of a most grateful heart for your invaluable favour of Wednesday last. Does my Harriet (already, methinks, I have sunk the name of Byron into that of Grandison), do Mrs Shirley, Mrs Selby think, that I have treated one of the most delicate of semale minds indelicately, in the wish (not the prescription) I have presumed to signify nify days thire, great unger in th was t from me, t mine grant have t will. was n own a bout y a speed he be Selbythe ha borne my reg obliged Our go them. of prefe Tuefda the hapfucceed turn.

should

Our

If I Tuefday prefent pouring invalual

Vol.

ind

hat

we

ca-

der

My

?-

e fo

wn,

ould

1 be ther

Poor

have

must

on of

pects,

-But

Tured

r will

vant,

YRON.

ON

Vov. 3.

n, the y Har-

ame of

Shirley,

of the

in the

to fig-

nify to the beloved of my heart, that within three days after my permitted return to Northamptonthire, I may be allowed to receive at the altar the greatest blessing of my life? I would not be thought ungenerous. I fignified my wishes; but I told you in the fame letter, that your chearful compliance was to me the great desireable. In every thing, from the date of the condescending letter before me, to the last of my life, shall your wishes determine mine. I will have your whole heart in the grant of every request I make to you, or you shall have the chearful acquiescence of mine with your Permit me to fay, that the family punctilio was not out of my thoughts when I expressed my own ardent wishes to you. Does not the world about you expect, on the return of the happy man, a fpeedy folemnization? I imagined, that whether he be permitted to make the place of his abode Selby-house or Shirley-manor, you would not that the happy day should be long deferred, which should give him rank as one of the dear family.

Our equipages, my dearest life, are all in great forwardness. In tenderness to you, I have forborne to consult you upon some parts of them, as my regard for your judgment would otherwise have obliged me to do. The settlements are all ready. Our good Mr Deane is ready to attend you with them. Allow me then to do myself the honour of presenting myself before you at Selby-house, on Tuesday next. I will leave it to you to distinguish the happiest day of my life, whether within the succeeding three, four, five, or even six of my return.

If I have not your commands to the contrary, Tuesday morning then, if not Monday night, shall present to you the most ardent and sincere of men, pouring out on your hand his grateful vows for the invaluable favour of Wednesday's date, which I Vol. VII.

considered in the sacred light of a plighted love; and, as such, have given it a place next my heart.

My most respectful compliments to all whom we both so justly hold dear, conclude me, dearest madam,

> Your most grateful, obliged, And ever-affectionate,

CHARLES GRANDISON.

LETTER XXIII.

Miss BYRON, To Lady G.

Monday Morning, Nov. 6.

I Send you, my dearest Lady G. a copy of your brother's letter of Friday last. Lucy has transcribed it for you. Lucy is very obliging. She desires to be allowed to correspond with you; and makes a merit of these transcriptions for an introduction; that is her view. I give you fair notice of it, that you may either check or encourage her, as you think fit.

Have I not cause to think your brother a little out of the way in his resolution of so sudden a return?—This night, perhaps, or to-morrow morning—I am vexed, my dear, because he is such an anticipater, that he leaves not to me the merit of obliging him beyond his expectation. However, I shall rejoice to see him. The moment he enters the room where I am, he can have no faults.

My aunt, who thinks he is full hasty, is gone to dine with my grandmamma, and intends to settle with that dear parent every thing for his reception at Shirley-manor. Nancy is gone with her. My uncle, at Mr Orme's invitation, is gone to dine with that worthy man.

Monday

Quari I ma the e ferabl may finger

I kno throughtfelf cafion G.—I
the oc

Th

you for creature God, wither! ing min prehen brother

Her

hand—
heard t we are and in a house th certainly road, w
dear H her app none bu came up and une

Monday Afternoon.

O MY dearest Lady G.! what shall we do? All quarrels are at an end! all petulance, all folly!— I may never, never be his at all!—I may, before the expected time of his arrival, be the most miferable of women!—Your brother, best of men!—

may be-Ah-my Charl-

Terrifed to death, my pen fell from my fingers—I fainted away—Nobody came near me. I know I was not long infenfible—My terrors broke through even the fit I fell into—Nothing but death itself could make me long infensible, on such an occasion—O how I shall terrify you!—Dearest Lady G.—But here, here comes my Lucy—Let her give the occasion of my anguish.

The following written by Miss Lucy Selby.

A T my cousin's request, while she is lain down, I proceed, my good Lady G. to account to you for her terrors, and for mine also—Dear creature!—But don't be too much terrified: God, we hope, God, we pray, will protect your brother! Mr Greville cannot be capable of the shocking mischief, barbarity, villainy, which, it is apprehended, he has in view: God will protect your brother!

Here, a note was brought from an anonymous hand—I don't know what I write—from an un-known hand; fignifying, that Mr Greville was heard to threaten the life of your brother; and we are told by more than one, that he is moody, and in a bad way as to his mind. And he left his house this morning; so the note says (and that he certainly did); and was seen to take the London road, with several servants, and others—And the dear Harriet has distracted herself and me with her apprehensions. My aunt out, my uncle out, none but maid-servants at home. We, before she came up to her closet, ran up and down, directing and undirecting; and she promised to go up, and

Monday

0 2

try

you; or an fair acou-

:

rt.

we

a-

ON.

6.

your has

ging.

a remornch an erit of ver, I enters fettle recepth her. try to compose herself, till my uncle came from the Park, where he is to dine with Mr Orme. He is sent for—Thank God my uncle is come!—

By Miss Byron.

And what, my dear Lady G. can his coming fignify? Lucy is gone down to shew him the anonymous writer's note. Dear, dear Sir! Lord of my wishes! forgive me all my petulance. Come safe—God grant it!—Come safe! And hand and heart! will be yours, if you require it, to-morrow morning!

HERE, Lady G. follows the copy of the alarming note. I broke the feal. It was thus directed:

To GEORGE SELBY, Efq; With Speed, Speed, Speed.

Honoured Sir,

is ten use of trail

A Very great respecter of one of the most generous and noblest of men (Sir Charles Grandison I mean) informs you, that his life is in great danger. He over heard Mr Greville say, in a rageful manner, as by his voice, "I never will allow such a prize to be carried from me. He shall die the death," and swore to it. He was a little in wine, it is true; and I should have diffegarded it for that reason, had I not informed mystelf that he is set out with armed men this morning. Make what use you please of this: You never will know the writer. But love and reverence to the young baronet is all my motive. So help me God!

Two of my uncle's tenants, severally, saw the shocking creature on the London road, with servants. What will become of me, before morning, if he arrive not this night in safety!

Monday

the I light. Grev Experient or representation of the second control of the second contro WH of flee And fuppof are fw is not thinghad I bance, ing for For I Such ft fore. S world! To wh written Now-

Nancy in night:
My unctime:
must no

Monday Night, Eleven.

My uncle dispatched two fervants to proceed on the London road as far as they could go for daylight. He himself rode to Mr Greville's. Mr Greville had been out all day, and well attended-Expected, however, to return at night.—To prepare for his escape (who knows?) after the blackeft of villainies. My aunt is in tears; my uncle reprefents aggravating circumstances. Our preparations, your brother's preparations; Mr Deane's expected arrival of to-morrow-Lucy weeps; Najicy wrings her hands-Your Harriet is in silent anguish—She can weep no more!—She can write no more!

Tuesday morning, 8 o' Clock, Nov. 7. WHAT a dreadful night have I had! Not a wink of fleep.

And nobody stirring Afraid to come down, I suppose, for fear of seeing each other. My eyes are swelled out of my head .- I wonder my uncle is not down. He might give orders about something-I know not what. What dreadful visions had I already, as it feemed, to continue my disturbance, could I have closed my eyes to give feeming form to the flying shadows! Waking dreams : For I was broad awake: Sally fat up with me. Such startlings! fuch absences!—I never was so before. Such another night would I not have for the world! I can only write. Yet what do I write? To what purpose?—You must not see what I have written. Now on my knees, praying, vowing: Now-Q my Lucy!

Lucy entered just here—Nancy followed her— Nancy tormented me with her reveries of the past night: My aunt is not well; she has not slept: My uncle fell into a dose, about his usual risingtime: He has had no rest. My grandmamma must not know the occasion of our grief, till it

Q 3

w the h fer-

m le

ng

0-

of

me

nd

OW

ing

ed.

ge

rles

is in

y, in

will

He

as a lifre-

my-

orn-

ne-

rence

help

ming,

Tonday

Dreadful If—— But no more—

LETTER XXIV.

Miss Byron. In Continuation.

Tuefday, 12 o' Glock, Nov. 7.

In a finall hand, under the Subscription of the inner Cover.

My dearest Lady G. pray read the first page of this Letter before you open the other dreadful one, sealed with five seals, and stitched to the Cover (that it may not slide officiously into your hands). Lucy will have me send the whole of that shocking letter. Against my judgment, I comply.

E met this morning, foul-less, and forlorn, all equally unable either to give or receive confolation. The officious note was taken up, laid down, taken up again: the hand endeavoured to be guessed at: And at last it was concluded, to dispatch a servant to Mr Greville's, to learn news of the supposed traitor.

But behold! before the fervant could return, in a riding-dress, having alighted at the outward gate, entered the hall your noble brother. I was the first whom he saw; the first who saw him. I was just going out, intending (yet hardly knowing my intention) to walk in the elm-row fronting the house, in order to shorten the way of the returning fervant with news.

He cast himself at my feet. Something he said, and more he intended to say; excusing his early return, and thanking me for my favour of the Wednesday before; when my joyful surprise overpowered both my speech and senses.—And what will

will reco abou

him-Wat th

feet, But grat fenti

lowe thou He t in th lips, 7 chai

all of blush fnatc dear be no mily-have down bent you retur

tage. fmilinhand will you fay to me, when I tell you, that, on my recovery, I found myfelf in his arms, mine clasped about his neck?

He was furprifed at my emotion. Well he might—Every one, in a moment, crouded about him-My aunt also folded her arms around him. -Welcome, welcome, welcome, was all the could at that instant fay.

I, utterly abashed, trembling, and doubting my feet, motioned to quit the hall for the parlour-But nobody minded me; all were busied in congratulating the joy of every heart; till Sally prefenting herself, I leaned upon her, and staggering to the parlour, threw myfelf into an elbow-chair.

ver.

Let-

aled

may have ainst lorn,

ceive

up,

vour-

aded,

learn

rn, in ward I was

m. I

owing ng the irning

e faid, early

of the

overd what will

Your brother, attended by all my friends, followed me in. My heart again bid him welcome, though my eye could not, at that instant, bear his. He took my hand, as I fat, between both his, and in the most respectful manner pressing it with his lips, befought me to compose myself.

They had hinted to him in the hall the cause of: all our emotions-They had as much reason to blush as I had.—Nancy, it feems, even Nancy, fnatched his hand, and kissed it, in raptures. How dear is he to us all! He fees it now: There can be no referves to him after this. Punctilio! Family-punctilio! mentioned he in his letter!-We have now no pretentions to it-

His eyes shone with grateful fensibility. Look down upon me, loveliest of women, said he, with a bent knee: Look down upon me, and tell me you forgive me for my early return: But, tho' returned, I am entirely at your devotion.

Lucy fays, the never faw me more to my advantage. I looked down upon him, as he bid me. fmiling through my tears. He stole gently my handkerchief from my half-hid face; with it he dried my unaverted cheek, and put it, she says, in his bosom. I have lost it.

My uncle and aunt withdrew with him, and acquainted him with all particulars. To them he acknowledged, in words of eloquent love, my uncle faid, the honour done him by me, and by us all, in the demonstration we had given of our tender regard for him.

I was, by the time of their return to us, pretty well recovered. Sir Charles approached me, without taking notice of the emotion I had been in. Mr and Mrs Selby tell me, faid he to me, that I am to be favoured with a residence at our venerable Mrs Shirley's. This, though a high honour, looks a little distant; so would the next door, if it were not under the same roof with my Miss Byron: But, smiling tenderly upon me, I shall presume to hope, that this very distance will turn to my account. Mrs Shirley's Harriet cannot decline paying her accustomed duty to the best of grandmothers.

Bowing, I shall not, Sir, said I, be the more backward to pay my duty to my grandmamina, for your obliging her with your company.

Thus, resumed he, snatching my hand, and ardently pressing it with his lips, do I honour to myself for the honour done me. How poor is man, that he cannot express his gratitude to the object of his vows, for obligations conferred, but by owing to her new obligation !

Then turning round to my aunt—It is incumbent upon me, madam, faid he, to pay my early devoirs to Mrs Shirley, the hospitable Mrs Shirley, repeated he, smiling; which looked as if he expected to be here. There, besides, (looking pleasantly apon my aunt) I may be asked—here I am not—to break my fast.

This fet us all into motion. My uncle ran out to look after Sir Charles's fervants, who, it feems, the waiti

but into infented received love, obligation points points and the contraction of the cont

Bu

ported we fer ville of ring, fervant well; fretful know me ke are for hope to fent far —I hu

Sir feen th the wr intenti fome b

Charle loves N hension

SIR CHARLES GRANDISON. 189

in our hurry, were difregarded: Their horses in the court-yard; three of them walking about, waiting their master's orders. My uncle was ready, in the true taste of old English hospitality, to pull them in.

Chocolate was instantly brought for their master; and a dish for each of us. We had made but a poor breakfast, any of us. I could get nothing down before. My aunt put a second dish into my hand: I took her kind meaning, and presented it to Sir Charles. How gratefully did he receive it! Will it always be so, Lady G.? My love, heightened by my duty, shall not, when the obligation is doubled, make me less deserving of his politeness, if I can help it.

But still this dreadful note, and Greville's reported moodiness, made us uneasy: The servant we sent returned, with information that Mr Greville came home late last night. He was not stirring, it seems, though eleven o'clock, when the servant reached his house. He is said to be not well; and, as one servant of his told ours, so very fretful, and ill-tempered, that they none of them know how to speak to him. God grant—But let me keep to myself such of my apprehensions as are sounded on conjecture—Why should I not hope the best? Is not your beloved brother at present safe? And is he not the care of Providence?—I humbly trust he is.

Sir Charles took the note. I think I have feen the hand, faid he: If I have, I shall find out the writer. I dare say, it is written with a good intention.

My uncle and we all expressed, some in words, fome by looks, our apprehensions.

There cannot possibly be room for any, said Sir Charles; always present to himself. Mr Greville loves Miss Byron. It is no wonder, as his apprehensions of losing all hopes of her for ever grow stronger,

-

.

n

15 1-ty e, en le,

oext

ny I ill

nelt

na,

to is the but

im-

ley, necntly

-to

out ms,

pay to which equipa He fronger, that he should be uneasy. He would make but an ill compliment to her merit, and his own sincerity, if he were not. But such a stake as he has in his country, he cannot have desperate intentions. I remember to his advantage his last behaviour here. I will make him a visit. I must engage Mr Greville to rank me in the number of his friends.

What he faid gave us comfort. No wonder if we women love courage in a man: We ought, if it be true courage, like that of your excellent brother. After all, my dear, I think we must allow a natural superiority in the minds of men over women. Do we not want protection? And does not that want imply inseriority?—Yet if there be two sorts of courage, an acquired and natural, why may not the former be obtained by women, as well as by men, were they to have the same education? NATURAL courage may belong to either. Had Miss Barnevelt, for example, had a boy's education, she would have probably challenged her man, on provocation given; and he might have come off but poorly.

But we have more filly antipathies than men, which help to keep us down: Whether those may not sometimes be owing to affectation, do you, Lady G. who, however, have as little affectation as ever woman had, determine. A frog, a toad, a spider, a beetle, an earwig, will give us mighty pretty tender terror; while the heroic men will trample the insect under foot, and look the more brave for their barbarity. and for our desicate screaming. But, for an adventure, if a lover get us into one, we frequently leave him a great way behind us. Don't you think so, Lady G.?— Were not this Greville still in my head, methinks I could be as pert as ever.

Sir Charles told us, that he should have been with us last night, but for a visit he was obliged to call it, my une grandn is defin will ob to her. add he give us pleafur ' can · ject to the y " mote ' youth once count " mem my gra to give Charles me wea and he much d had not did this felf quit Sir Cha aunt, w me feve

· loft,

· withe pay to Sir Harry Beauchamp; to make up for which hindrance, he took horse, and ordered his equipage to follow him.

S

.

A

A.

of

if

it

0-

a

0-ot

WO

hy

as lu-

er.

y's

her

ave

en,

nay

ou,

n as d, a

hty

Will

nore

icate get way

iks I

He is gone to pay his duty, as he is pleased to call it, to my grandmamma, in my uncle's coach, my uncle with him. If they cannot prevail on my grandmamma to come hither to dinner, and if the is defirous Sir Charles thould dine with her, he will oblige her-by my aunt's leave, was his address to her. But perhaps the will have the goodness to add her company to his, as the knows that will give us all double pleafure: She loves to give pleasure. Often does the dear lady say, "How can palfied age, which is but a terrifying ob-' ject to youth, expect the indulgence, the love of the young and gay, if it does not study to pro-' mote those pleasures which itself was fond of in 'youth? Enjoy innocently your leafon, girls, once faid the, fetting half a fcore of us into 'country dances. I watch for the failure of my ' memory; and shall never give it over for quite ' loft, till I forget what were my own innocent ' withes and delights in the days of my youth."

Tuefday, Five o' Llock.

My uncle and Sir Charles came back to dinner; my grandmamma with them. She was so good as to give them her company, at the first word. Sir Charles, as we sat at dinner, and afterwards, saw me weak in mind, bashful, and not quite recovered; and he seemed to watch my uncle's eyes, and so much diverted him and all of us, that my uncle had not opportunity to put forth, as usual. How did this kind protection assure me! I thought my-self quite well; and was so chearfully silent when Sir Charles talked, that my grandmamma and aunt, who had placed me between them, whispered me severally—You look charmingly easy, love—

You

been ed to pay You look like yourself, my dear. Yet still this mischievous Greville ran in my head.

My uncle took notice, that Sir Charles had faid he guessed at the writer of the note. He wished he would give him an item, as he called it, whom he thought of.

You observe, Sir, answered Sir Charles, that the writer says, Mr Greville was in wine. He professes to be an encourager of the people of the George in Northampton. He often appoints company to meet him there. I imagine the writer to be the head waiter of the house: The bills delivered me in seem to have been written in such a hand as the note, as far as I can carry the hand-writing in my eye.

Ads-heart, faid my uncle, that's undoubtedly right: Your name's up, Sir, I can tell you among men, women, and children. This man, in his note, calls you (look, else!) the most generous and noble of men. He says, we shall never know the writer!—Ads-dines! the man must deal in art magic that conceals himself from you, if you have a mind to find him out.

Well, but, faid Lucy, if this be fo, I am concerned at the reality of the information. Such threatnings as Mr Greville throws out are not to be flighted. Very true, faid my uncle. Mr Deane and I (Mr Deane will certainly be here by and bye) will go and discourse with Greville himself tomorrow, please the Lord.

Sir Charles begged that this matter might be left to his management. Mr Greville and I, faid he, are upon fuch a foot, as, whether he be so sincerely my friend as I am his, or not, will warrant a visit to him; and he cannot but take it as a civility, on my return into these parts.

Should he be affronting, Sir Charles? faid my

I can have patience, if he should. He cannot be grossly so.

I know

is a w

I

Were to appanoth being micab to-mo

Ad who c

Sir complinvite His fo with r

My
ed at r
pose, fa faid, Y
own m not a r man I

cool, b

But one work which is converts mamma fhould its? You were ten This multury.

Vol.

I know not that, replied my uncle: Mr Greville is a roifter!

iif-

aid

he

he

the

ffes

e in

neet

ead

eem

e, as edly

ong

note,

no-

wri-

agic

mind

cern-

reat-

to be )eane

and

elf to-be left

id he,

cerely

a visit

ty, on id my not be

know

Well, dear Mr Selby, leave this matter to me. Were there to be danger, the way to avoid it is not to appear to be afraid of it. One man's fear gives another courage. I have no manner of doubt of being able to bring Mr Greville with me to an amicable dish of tea, or to dinner, which you please, to-morrow.

Ads-heart, Sir, I wish not to see at either the wretch who could threaten the life of a man so dear to us all.

Sir Charles bowed to my uncle for his fincere compliment. I have nothing to do, faid he, but to invite myself either to breakfast, or dine with him. His former scheme of appearing to the world well with me, in order to save his spirit, will be resumed, and all will be right.

My aunt expressed her fears, however, and looked at me, as I did at her, with a countenance, I suppose, far from being unapprehensive: But Sir Charles said, You must leave me, my dear friends, to my own methods, nor be anxious for my safety. I am not a rash man: I can pity Mr Greville; and the man I pity cannot easily provoke me.

We were all the easier for what the charminglycool, because truly-brave, man said on a subject which has given us all so much terror.

But was he not very good, my dear, not to fay one word all this day of the important errand on which he came down? And to lead the subjects of conversation with design, as my aunt and grandmamma both thought, as well as I, that my uncle should not? and to give me time to recover my spirits? Yet when he did address himself to me, never were tenderness and respect so engagingly mingled. This my uncle observed, as well as my aunt and Lucy. How the duce, said he, does this Sir Charles manage it? He has a way no man but him ever found out—He can court without speech: He can Vol. VII.

take one's heart and fay never a word. Hay, Har. riet! looking archly.

MR Deane is come—In charming health and spirits—Thank God! With what cordiality did Sir Charles and he embrace each other!

Sir Charles attended my grandmamma home: So we had not his company at supper. No convenience without its contrary. He is her own son: She is his own parent. Such an unaffected love on both sides!—Such a sweetly-easy, yet respectful, familiarity between them! What additional pleasures must a young woman in my situation have, when she can consider herself as the bond of union between the family she is of, and that she is entering into! How dreadful, on the contrary, must be her case, who is the occasion of propagating dissention, irreconcileable hatred and abhorrence, between her own relations and those of the man to whom she for life engages herself!

My grandmother and Sir Charles were no fooner gone, than my uncle began to talk with Mr Deane on the fubject that is nearest all our hearts. I was asraid the conversation would not be managed to my liking; and having too just an excuse to ask leave to withdraw, from bad, or rather no rest last night, I made use of it; and here in my closet

(preparing now, however for it) am I

Your ever-affectionate

HARRIET BYRON.

LETTER

S I

He riet k hold duce t pize an

would Do

and ke not shi men to quiet, there i

My

now bl hafty. lover co know, did; a to take from t himfelf knowle all men a fhort ledgmen he has

tude, uj

LETTER XXV.

Mis Byron. In Continuation.

Wednesday Morning, Nov. 8.

CIR Charles let my grandmother come hither by herself. He is gone to visit that Greville. We are all in pain for him: But Mr Deane comforts us.

After breakfast, thus began my uncle upon me. Here, Dame Selby, are we still at a fault? Harriet knows not what she would be at; and you uphold in her nonfenses. Delicacy! Delicacy! The duce take me, if I have any notion of it !- What a pize are you about?

Dear Sir! why am I blamed? faid I. What would you have me do, that I have not done?

Do! why I would have you give him his day. and keep to it; that I would have you do: And not shilly-shally for ever-and subject the best of men to infults. All your men will be easy and quiet, when the ceremony is over, and they know there is no remedy.

1.

D1-

So

ni-

She

oth

ili-

nust

fhe

een

to!

afe,

irher

the oner

eane

Was

d to) ask

A last

closet

YRON.

ER

My good Mr Selby, faid my grandmamma, you now blame without reason. Sir Charles was full hafty. Harriet was a little more nice perhaps, her lover considered, than the needed to be. Yet I don't know, but I, in her case, should have done as she did; and expected as much time as the was willing to take. It was not a very long one, Mr Selby, from the declaration he made; and he is a man himself of great delicacy Harriet very readily acknowledged to him the preference the gave him to all men; and when the found him very earnest for a fhort day, she, by her last letter, threw herself generously into his power. He is full of acknowledgments upon it; and so he enght to be. To me he has faid all that a man should say of his gratitude, upon the occasion; and he declared to me Rz lalt last night, that it was with difficulty he forbore taking advantage of her goodness to him: But that he checked himself, and led to other subjects, seeing how much the dear creature was disordered, and being apprehensive, that if he had begun upon one so interesting, or even wished to talk with her alone, he should have increased her disorder.

Oy, Oy! Sir Charles is confiderate; and Harriet should be grateful: But indeed my Dame Selby is as filly, to the full, as Harriet. She is for having Harriet keep her in countenance in the dance she led me so many years ago—Lady G. for my money. She finds you all out in your masonry.

Mr Selby, faid my aunt, I only refer myfelf to what our venerable parent just now faid.

And fo don't think it worth while to hold an argument with me, I suppose?

I did not know, my dear, that you wanted to hold an argument.

Your fervant, madam-with that fly leer-So like Harriet! and Harriet fo like you!

But, Mr Selby, faid my grandmamma, will you be pleased to tell the dear child, if you think her wrong, what is the next step she should take?

Think her wrong!—Next step!—Why the next step is, as the has promifed to oblige him, and to be directed by him, to keep her word, and not hum nor bare about the matter.

Mr Deane, who had been shewn and told everything that had passed since we saw him last, said, You don't know, Mr Selby, that my daughter Byron will make unnecessary parade. Sir Charles, you find, in tenderness to her, asked no question yesterday; made no claim—She could not begin the subject.

But, faid Lucy, I cannot but fay that my coulin is in some fault.

Look you there now! faid my uncle.

Char her I

11

very

fent you him

Sa

little with thing Here, and hand, nefs in day h

As
ed my bers in put to this da Sir Cl
Prepar
I do ai

for ev

—Don man—and, Oy, and forry fe

My to Mr Dea ma, my ther.

We h

We

We all stared at Lucy; for she spoke and looked very feriously.

ore

hat

fee-

red,

pon

her riet

y is

ring

The

mo-

f to n ar-

hold

o like

you

c her

next

to be

m nor

very.

faid,

r By-

arles,

eftion

begin cousin

We

Might she not have said, proceeded she, when Sir Charles surprised her at his first arrival (what the her heart was divided between past terror and present joy?) Here I am, Sir, at your service: Are you prepared for to-morrow?—And then made him one of her best courtesses.

Sauce-box!—Well, well, I believe I have been a little hasty in my judgment (rapping under the table with his knuckles): But I am so asraid that something will happen between the cup and the lip—Here, last night, I dreamt that Lady Clementina and he were going to be married—Give me your hand, my dear Harriet, and don't revoke the kindness in your last letter to him, but whatever be the day he proposes, comply, and you will win my heart for ever.

As Sir Charles leads, Harriet must follow, resumed my grandmamma. You men are sad prescribers in these delicate cases, Mr Selby. You will be put to it, my dear love, taking my hand, before this day is over, now you seem so purely recovered. Sir Charles Grandison is not a dreaming lover. Prepare your mind, my child: You'll be put to it, I do assure you.

Why, oy; I can't but fay, Sir Charles is a man—Don't you, my lovely Love, be too much a wo-man—too close a copier of your aunt Selby here—and, as I faid, you will have my heart for ever—Oy, and Sir Charles too; for he is not one of your forry fellows that can't distinguish between a favour and a folly.

My uncle then went out with a flourish, and took Mr Deane with him; leaving only my grandmamma, my aunt, my Lucy, and your Harriet, together.

We had a good deal of talk upon the important fubject. The conclusion was, that I would refer

Sir Charles to my grandmamma, if he were urgent for the day, and she was vested with a discretionary power to determine for her girl.

Such of my cloaths, then, as were near finished, were ordered to be produced, with some of the ornaments. They were all to sit in judgment upon them.

Surely, Lady G. these are solemn circumstances, lightly as my uncle thinks of them. Must not every thoughtful young creature, on so great a change, and for life, have conslicts in her mind, be her prospects ever so happy, as the day approaches? Of what materials must the hearts of runaways, and of sugitives, to men half-strangers to them, be compounded?

My aunt has just left with me the following billet, from Sir Charles, directed to my uncle, from

Mr Greville's:

Dear Mr. Selby,

REGRET every moment that I pass out of Selbyhouse, or Shirley-manor: And as I have so sew particular friends in these parts out of your family, I think I ought to account to you for the hours I do: Nor will I, now our friendship is so unalterably fixed and acknowledged, apologize for giving myself, by this means, the consequence with your family, that every one of yours, for their single takes, are of to me, superadded to the tenderest attachments to one dear person of it.

I found the gentleman in a less happy disposition than I expected.

It is with inexpressible reluctance that he thinks, as my happy day draws near, of giving up all hopes of an object so dear to him. He seemed strangely balancing on this subject, when I was introduced to him. He instantly proposed to me, and with some sierceness, that I would suspend all thoughts of marriage for two months to come, or at lea

be c was, chose

whon Georg

He intent my m lady. concer with I shou yours

Mr

did noted at yesteroing m Georg the m and to man! have I been he

An he cal friends

You at, out In the

he met at least for one. I received his request with proper indignation. He pretended to give reasons respecting himself: I allowed not of them.

After fome canvaffings, he fwore, that he would be complied with in fomething. His alternative was, my dining with him, and with fome of his chosen friends, whom he had invited.

I have reason to think these friends are those to whom he expressed himself with violence at the George, as over-heard, I suppose, by the waiter there.

He rode out, he owned, yesterday morning, with intent to meet me; for he boafts, that he knows all my motions, and those of a certain beloved young Let him, let every-body, who thinks it their concern to watch our steps, be made acquainted with them: The honest heart aims not at fecrets. I should glory in receiving Miss Byron's hand from yours, Sir, before ten thousand witnesses.

Mr Greville had rode out the night before; he did not say to meet me; but he knew I was expected at Selby-house, either on Monday night, or yesterday morning: And on his return, not meeting me, he and his friends passed their night at the George, as mentioned, and rode out together in the morning-In hopes of meeting me, he faid; and to engage me to suspend my happy day. Poor man! Had he been in his right mind, he could not have hoped (had he met me on the road) to have been heard on fuch a subject.

An act of oblivion, and through reconciliation, he calls it, is to pass, in presence of his expected friends.

You will not take notice of what I have hinted at, out of the family, whatever was defigned.

In the temper he would have found me in, had he met me, no harm could have happened; for he is really to be pitied.

We

est atofition hinks, up all eemed vas into me, end all nt

12-

ed,

or-

on ces,

venge,

oro-

Of and om-

bil-

rom

elby-

e fo

ir far the

is fo ze for

with fingle

me, or

at

We are now perfect friends. He is full of good wishes. He talks of a visit to Lady Frampton, of a month. I write thus particularly, that I may not allow such a subject as this to interfere with that delightful one which engrosses my whole attention; and which I hope, in the evening, will be honoured with the attention of the beloved and admired of every heart, as well as that of

Your ever obliged and affectionate Ch. GRANDISON.

Poor wicked Greville!—May he go to Lady Frampton's, or where-ever else, so it be fifty miles distant from us. I shall be afraid of him, till I hear he has quitted, for a time, his seat in this neighbourhood.

What a glorious quality is courage, when it is divested of rashness! When it is sounded on integrity of heart, and innocence of life and manners! But, otherwise sounded, is it not rather to be called favageness, and brutality?

How much trouble have I given your brother! What dangers have I involved him in! It cannot be possible for me ever to reward him.—But the proudest heart may deem it a glory to owe obligation to Sir Charles Grandison.

LETTER XXVI.

Miss Byron. In Continuation.

Wednesday Night, Nov. 8.

S IR Charles broke away, and came hither by our tea-time. I was in my closet writing. They all crouded about him. He avoided particulars: Only said, that all was friendship between Mr Greville and himself; and that Mr Greville came

ed fol

body dear, me th tea. parlor hours

Ic

me.
that t curiof What could which fo who fo infi they o

Tea -May audien

Sir, to bett relucta to lead feating a thout your la

He lencourage then, if

You you, th my dear you are and of came with him part of the way; full of his resumed scheme of appearing to be on a good understanding with him, and a friend to the alliance between him and us.

Sir Charles looked about him, as if for somebody he saw not. My aunt came up to me: My dear, do you know who is come? She then gave me the above particulars. We had a summons to tea. We hastened down. He met us both at the parlour-door. O madam, said he, what precious hours have I lest!—I have been patience itself!

I congratulated him on what my aunt had told me. I found he intended, as he fays in his billet, that the particulars he gave in it should answer our curiosity; and to have done with the subject. What a charming possession of himself, that he could be in such a brangle, as I may call it, and which might have had fatal consequences; yet be so wholly, and so soon, divested of the subject; and so infinitely agreeable upon half a score others, as they offered from one or other as we fat at tea!

Tea was no fooner over, but he fingled me out —May I, madam, beg the favour of an half-hour's audience?

Sir, Sir! hesitated the simpleton, and was going to betray my expectation, by expressing some little reluctance; but, recollecting myself, I suffered him to lead me into the cedar-parlour. When there, seating me—Now, madam, let me again thank you, a thousand and a thousand times, for the honour of your last condescending letter.

He but just touched my hand, and appeared so encouragingly respectful—I must have loved him then, if I had not before.

You have, my dearest Miss Byron, a man before you, that never can be ungrateful. Believe me, my dearest life, though I have urged you as I have, you are absolutely your own mistress of the day, and of every day of my life, as far as it shall be in

my er by itingparti tween reville bod

fa

not

hat

on;

red

l of

ON.

ady

ailes

ill I

this it is in-nan-

r to

her!

nnot

the obli-

my power to make you so. You part with power, my lovely Miss Byron, but to find it with augmentation. Only let me beseech you, now I have given it you back again, not to permit your heart to be swayed by mere motives of punctilio.

A charming glow had overfpread his cheek; and he looked as when I beheld him in his fifter's dreffing-room, after he had refcued me from the hands of the then cruel, now mortified, Sir Har-graxe Poilexfen.

Punctilio, mere punctilio, Sir, shall not weigh with me. What I wrote to you, I intended to comply with. My heart, Sir, is—Yours!—I would have faid—Why would not my tongue speak it?—My, my, I stammered—Why did I stammer?—Had I not owned it before to be so?—My grandmamma, Sir, and aunt—I could not at that instant, for my life, say another word.

Sweet confusion! I urge you no more on this topic just now: I joyfully take your reference. Then drawing a chair next me, he kissed his own hand, and held it out, as it were, courting mine. I yielded it to him, as by an involuntary motion—yet my heart was forwarder than my hand. He tenderly grasped it—retaining it—and instead of urging the approaching day, talked to me as if it were passed.

I have a request to make to your grandmother, your uncle and aunt, your Lucy, and our Mr Deane; it is a very bold one: That when I have been blessed with your hand, they will be so good as to accompany their beloved Harriet, then no more Byron, but Grandison, to my family-seat, and see the beloved of every heart happily sixed, and in possession of it. The house is venerable; I will not call it old, but large and convenient. Compassion for your neighbouring admirers will induce you to support me in this request. You cannot bear, I imagine, without a lessening of your own : you, fee at prefer the on for the fecretl cessful fome excursi by tho: fo foon I may Orme, quit the attend . ved, an with yo Support fal, who make it. been too do me tl wishes to must tak however for the hand to the hand to the hand to the hand to the hope not gain. He tion and the grafpin are not, I Difplea.

he only—

own joy (if I prove the just, the grateful man to you, that, if I know myfelf, I shall be), either to fee at church, or in your vifits, those men who preferred you to all women; or, if they forbear the one or the other, to account with a gentle figh for their forbearance. Other women might triumph fecretly on fuch occasions; but I, even I, the fuccessful, the distinguished man, shall not forbear fome inward pity for them. Now, madam, an excursion of a month or two, if no more, made by those dear friends, who otherwise will be loth. fo foon as I wish, to part with you, will wean, as I may fay, these unhappy men from you. Orme, Mr Greville, will not then be obliged to quit their own houses: All your new relations will attend you in turn, in the house that I always loved, and wished to settle in; your own relations with you, and witnesses of our mutual happiness. Support me, generously support me in this propofal, when I shall be intitled, by your goodness, to make it.—Silent, my dearest love!—If I have been too early in thus opening my heart to you, do me the justice to suppose that it is owing to my withes to pass over another interesting subject which must take place before my proposal can, and which, however, engages my whole heart.

I might well be filent: I could not find utterance for the emotions of my heart. I withdrew my hand to take my handkerchief [you have often told me, Lady G. that I was born in an April morning]; but putting it into my other hand, I gratefully (I hope not too fondly) laid it in his way to take again. He did, with an air that had both veneration and gratitude in it-My dearest life, tendery grasping it—how amiable this goodness!—You are not, I see, displeased.

Difpleafed—O Sir Charles!—But, alas! while You am too happy, the exalted lady abroad!—She!
of your he only—Your friend Jeronymo's last letter—

Thus

OWN

۲,

1.

ve

irt

k:

I's

the

ar-

vith

ply

ave

My,

id I

ma.

for

this ence.

own

mine.

otion

hand. Mead

as if

ther, T Mr

have

good

ien no y-feat,

fixed,

ble; I enient.

rs will

Thus brokenly did I express (what my heart was full of) her worthiness, my inferiority.

Exalted creature !—Angelic goodness! You are Clementina and Harriet both in one: One mind certainly informs you both.

Just then came in my aunt Selby. I have, madam, said he to her, been making a request to your beloved niece: I am exceedingly earnest in it. She will be so good as to break it to you; and I hope—

O Sir! interrupted my too eager aunt, suppofing it had been for the day, Mrs Shirley has the power-

My dear aunt Selby! faid I. What have I faid, love?

He caught eagerly at it-Happy mistake! faid

he. My dear Mrs Selby, I thank you.

He bowed, kissed my hand, and left me, to go to my grandmamma, to inform himself of what he had to hope for, as to the day, from her.

I told my aunt what the request was, and she approved of his proposal. It will be the pride of your uncle's heart and mine, said she, to see you fettled in Grandison-hall.

In less than a quarter of an hour Sir Charles returned overjoyed, with an open billet in his hand, from the venerable parent. What short work did my grandmamma make of it! This is it:

"To me, my Harriet, you have referred the most important day of your life. May the "Almighty shower down his blessings on it!

"Thursday, next week, God willing, is the day which shall crown the happiness of us all. Make no objections, my dearest child.

" Hasten to me, and say, you acquiesce chearfully in the determination of

'Your ever-affectionate
'HENRIETTA SHIRLEY.

open with woul per i lines my d her c knee.

F

tend

with

He fomet dy G. fain a eyes.] faid he we hal

My fitation which And I

Ther G. the ceived, ful of lo

I had begun to was filled miltake,

Well, my uncl hope—

Well, accent the Your n by, faid n Vol. V

Had

Had you feen, my dear Charlotte, with what tender respect your brother approached me, and with what an inimitable grace he offered me the open billet, how would you have been charmed with him! The excellent Mrs Shirley, said he, would not permit me to bring this incitimable paper folded. I have contemplated the propitious lines all the way. On my knee let me thank you, my dear Miss Byron, for your acquiescence with her determination. He kissed my hand on one knee.

He saw me disturbed [could I help it? There is something awful in the fixing of the very day, Lady G.; but I tried to recover myself. I would fain avoid appearing guilty of affectation in his eyes.] I will not add a word more, my angel, said he, on the joyful subject. Only tell me, shall we hasten to attend the condescending parent?

My duty to her, Sir, faid I, (but with more hefitation than I wished) shall be an earnest of that which I am so soon, so very soon to vow to you. And I gave him my hand.

There is no describing to you, my dear Lady G. the looks, the manner with which it was received, by the most ardent, and yet most respectful of lovers.

I had fcarce approached my grandmamma, and begun to utter fomething of the much my heart was filled with, when my uncle and Mr Deane (by mittake, I believe) were admitted.

Well, let us know every thing about it, faid my uncle—I hope Sir Charles is pleafed. I hope——

The day was named to him.

Well, well, thank God! And he spoke in an accent that expressed his joy.

Your niece has pleased you now, I hope, Mr Selby, said my grandmamma.

Vol. VII. S Pretty

in ou;

as ire

nd

nato to

the faid to go what

d she ide of e you

les rehand, rk did

ed the lay the!
is the sall.

chear-

irley." Had Pretty well! pretty well! God grant that we meet with no put-offs! I hardly longed so much for my own day with my dame Selby there, as I have done, and do, to see my Harriet Lady Grandison—God, God bless you, my dearest love! and kissed my cheek—You have been very, very good in the main—And, but for dame Selby, would have been better, as far as I know.

You don't do me justice, my dear, replied my aunt.

Don't I!-Nor did I ever-taking kindly her hand. It was impossible, my dear Sir Charles Grandison, for such a man as I to do justice to this excellent woman. You never, Sir, will be fo froppish as I have been: It was in my nature: I could not help it: But I was always forry for it afterwards-But if Harriet make you no worse a wife than my dame Selby has made me, you will not be unhappy-And yet I was led a tedious dance after her before I knew what she would be at - I had like to have forgot that. But one thing I have to request, proceeded my uncle-Mr Deane and I have been talking of it-God bless your dear fouls, all of you, oblige me-It is, that we may have a joyful day of it, and that all our neighbours and tenants may rejoice with us. I must make the village fmoak. No hugger-mugger doings-Let private weddings be for doubtful happines-

O my uncle! faid I-

And O my niece, too: I must have it so. Sir Charles, what say you? Are you for chamber-marriages? I say, that such are neither decent nor godly. But you would not allow Lady G. to come off so—And in your own case—

Am for doing as in Lady G.'s. I must hope to pay my vows at the altar to this excellent lady.

What fays my Miss Byron?

I, Sir, hope to return mine in the fame facred plac

any be p

S

ry d ing couf

head and, in th

T

be a upon would A:

Need

De panio once

I w fee, fi would

at he bear to But we my head envy hat the ked da fical g

will po

place (my face, as I felt in a glow); but yet I shall with to have it as private as possible.

Why, oy, to be fure—When a woman is to do any thing the is athamed of, I think the is right to be private for example-take. Shall you be ashamed, Sir Charles?

Sir Charles has given it under his hand this very day, faid Lucy (interrupting him as he was going to fpeak), that he shall glory in receiving my cousin's hand before ten thousand witnesses.

Make but my dearest Miss Byron easy on this head, faid Sir Charles (that task, ladies, be yours); and, so the church be the place, I shall be happy in the manner.

The ceremony, faid my grandmamma, cannot be a private one with us: Every body's eyes are upon us. It would be an affectation in us that would rather raise than allay curiosity.

And I have as good as promifed the two pretty Needhams, faid my uncle—and Miss Watson and her cousin are in expectation—

O my uncle!

H'C

for ive

di-

ind boc

uld

my

her

rles

this rop-

ould

fter-

wife

ot be af-

had ve to ind I fouls,

ave a

and

e vil-

pri-

. Sir

-mar-

or god-

me off

ope to lady.

facred

place

Dear Harriet, forgive me! These are your companious from childhood! You can treat them but once in your life in this way. They would be glad at heart to return the savour.

I withdrew: Lucy followed me—You, Lucy, I fee, faid I, are for these public doings—But you would not if it were your own case.

Your case is my case, Harriet. I should hardly bear being made a show of with any other man: But with such a man as yours, if I did not hold up my head, I should give leer for stare, to see how envy sat upon the women's faces. You may leer at the men for the same reason. It will be a wicked day, after all, Harriet; for a general envy will posses the hearts of all beholders.

Lucy, you know, my dear Lady G. is a whim-fical girl

So, my dear, the folemn day is fixed. If you could favour me with your supporting presence—I know, if you come, you will be very good, now I have not, as I hope you think, been guilty of much, no not of any parade.—Lucy will write letters for me to Lady D. to my cousins Reeves, and will undertake all matters of ceremony for her Harriet. May I but have the happiness to know that Lady Clementina—What can I wish for Lady Clementina?—But should she be unhappy—that would indeed be an abatement of my felicity!

There is no fuch thing as thinking of the dear Emily. What a happiness, could I have seen Lady L. here!—But that cannot be. May the day that will in its anniversary be the happiest of my life, give to Lord and Lady L. their most earnest withes!

Sir Charles dispatches Frederick to-morrow to town with letters: He will bring you mine. I would not go to rest till I had finished it.

What have I more to fay?—I feem to have a great deal. My head and my heart are full: Yet it is time to draw to a conclusion.

Let me, my dearest Lady G. know, if I am to have any hopes of your presence! Will you be so good as to manage with Emily.

My aunt bids me suppose to you, that since we are to have all the world of our acquaintance, you should bring down your aunt Grandison with you—We have at both houses a great deal of room.

Sir Charles just now asked my grandmamma, Whether Dr Curtis would be satisfied with a handfome present, if every one's dear Dr Bartlett were to perform the ceremony! My grandmamma answered, that Dr Curtis was one of my admiring friends. He had for years, even from my girlhood, prided himself with the hopes of joining my hand in marriage, especially if the office were performed in Northamptonshire. She was asraid he would would worth Sir spect rable

Ad tinue love.

folem

many of with lost of the which y Harriet downright I imp. The girthew you ther, with more an improvement of the work of the control of the co

And for time to fi pudent the twenty I

-But tl

And f

lip! O 1

would think himfelf flighted; and he was a very worthy man.

Sir Charles acquiefced. But, greatly as I respect Dr Curtis, I should have preferred the venerable Dr Bartlett to any man in the world. folemn, folemn fubject, though a joyful one!

Adieu, adieu, my dear Lady G. Be fure, continue to love me. I will, if possible, deserve your love.

u

W

of

t-

S,

er

W dy

at ear Ja-

day 2714

nelt

v to I ve a

Yet

m to be fo

e we

you

1 you

mma,

nand-

were a an-

om.

Witness HARRIET BYRON.

LETTER XXVII.

Lady G. To Miss BYRON.

E XPECT a letter of hurry, in answer to one, Friday Morning, Nov. 10. two, three, four, five, fix, I don't know how many of yours; fome filled with tenderness, some with love, fome with nicety, fenfe, and nonfenfe. I shall reckon with you foon for one of them, in which you take intolerable liberties with me. O Harriet! tremble at my refentment. downright fcurrilous, my dear.

I imputed extravagance to Emily in my last. The girl's a good girl. I was too hafty. I will hew you two letters of hers, and one of my brother, which clears up the imputation. I love her more and more. Poor girl! love peeps out in twenty places of hers: In his he is the best of men

-But that you knew before.

And so the honest man kissed you, kissed your lip! O lud! O lud! how could you bear him afterwards in your fight ?- Forgiving creature !-And fo you were friends with him before you had time to shew your anger.—Nothing like doing impudent things in a hurry.—Sometimes respectful,

S 3 fometimes.

airing girlng my e per-

would

id he

fometimes free: Why this is the way of all the fellows, Harriet!—And so they go on till the respectfulness is drawn off, and nothing but the lees are left; and after two or three months are over, the once squeamish palate will be glad of them.

I like your uncle better than I like either your aunt or you-He likes me.

What a miserable dog [take the word for shortness; I am in haste] is Sir Hargrave!

Your plea against Clementina being compelled, or over-persuaded (the same thing), I much like. You are a good girl.

Betwixt her excellencies and yours, how must my brother's foul be divided! I wonder he thinks of either of you.

As and two bundles of hay, Harriet. But my brother is a nobler animal. He won't starve. However, I think in my conscience, that he should have you both. There might be a law made, that the case should not be brought into precedent, till two such women should be found, and such a man, and all three in the like situation.

Bagenhall, a miserable devil! Excellent warning.

pieces!

Wicked Harriet! You infected me with your horrible inferences from Greville's temper, threatnings, and so forth. The conclusion of this letter left me a wretch!—If these megrims are the effect of love, thank Heaven I never knew what it was.

Devilish girl, to torment me with your dreams! If you ever tell me any more of them, except they are of a different fort, woe be to you!

I like your parting scene, and all that. Your realities, thank Heaven, are more delightful than your reveries. I hope you'll always find them so.

And so you were full of apprehensions on the favour your aunt did me in employing me about your nuptial equipments. Long ago "you gave affectation to the winds." Good! But the winds would you was brot love pret but beth fam fawer of y time crow a make it I win must you. to or —Sy a ter other felve cond wrong think hard good year

tion

M

you. upon But, ed (heart

Je

ment

would not accept of your present. They pussed it you back again, and your servants never told it was brought home. I repeat, my dear, that my brother is much more clever, in these scenes of love and courtship, than his mistress. You are a pretty cow, my love: You give good store of milk, but you have a very careless heel. Yet when you bethink you, you are very good; but not always the same Harriet. Your nurse in your infancy, see-sawed you—Margery-down—and you can't put the pretty play out of your practice, though it is out of your memory. I can look back, and sometimes by your forwardness, sometimes by your crowing, know how it was with you eighteen years ago.

r

t-

70 u ift

ks

ny

e.

ld

at ill

n,

g ur

at-

et-

the

t it

15" ept

our nan

0.

the

out

afnds ould

My brother's letter to you, after he has mentioned his visits to the two sick Baronets, is that of a man who shews you genteelly, and politely, that he is fensible he has a pretty trifler to deal with. I wish you would square your conduct, by what you must imagine a man of his sense would think of you. I should be too proud a minx, in your case, to owe obligation to my man for bearing with me -Spare me, spare me, Harriet! I have hit myself a terrible box o' the ear. But we can find faults in others, which we will not allow to be fuch in ourfelves-But here is the difference between your conduct now, and what mine was: I knew I was wrong, and refolved one day to amend: You think yourself right, and, while you so think, will hardly ever mend, till your man ties you down to good behaviour.

Jeronymo's letter! O the next to divine Clementina! Indeed, Harriet, I think she out-sears you. I adore her. But will she be prevailed upon to marry?—She will!—If she does—Then— But, dear soul!—Pressed as she is—Having resused (instead of being resused) the beloved of her heart, she will still be greater than any of her sex,

if

But too ha nation Tell

tions.

'" Y aunt's
her.

But

have be both I fuppose the thomot for your he her to a vice? I will rem whom r his past ish drea minent made it would I fuch foil not the state, be ciate you dream a

But a

Well about thought proud gi your ma charming And you can be Nor ough if she does; the man proposed so unexceptionable; so tenderly loving her, in the height of her prosperity!—Gratitude to him, as well as duty to her parents; parents so indulgent as they have always been to her; will incline her to marry. May she be happy!—I am pleased with your solicitude for her happiness.

I like your answer to my brother: A good and well-deserved resignation. Let's see how you keep to it.

You do keep to it—as I expected—Ah! Harriet! you are quite a girl fometimes; though at others more than woman! "Will he not ask leave to come down?" Fine refignation!—"Will he not write first!"—Yes, yes, he will do every thing he ought to do. Look to your own behaviour, child; don't fear but his will be all as it should be.

As to your finery, how now, Harriet! Are you to direct every thing; yet pretend to ask advice? Be contented that every thing is done for you of this fort, and learn to be humble. Surely we that have passed the Rubicon, are not to be directed by you, who never came in fight of the river. But you, maidens, are poor, proud, pragmatical mortals. You profess ignorance; but in heart imagine you are at the tip-top of your wisdom.

But here you come with your horrid fears again. Would to the Lord the day were over; and you and my brother were—Upon my life—You are a—

But I won't call you names.

Lucy thinks you should go to Shirley-manor when my brother comes—Egregious folly! I did not think Lucy could have been so filly.

Concerning our cousin Reeves wanting to be present at your nuptials—your invitation to me—and what you fay of Emily-more anon.

Well, and so my brother has sent you the expected letter. Does it please you, Harriet? The duce is in you, if it don't.

But

But you are not pleased with it, it seems. He is too hasty for you. Where is the boasted-of resignation, Harriet? True semale resignation!

r

S

d

P

t!

rs

10 te

ht

't

ou

e ?

is ve

Il,

u,

Is.

ou

in.

ou

nen

nat

be ect-

uce

But

Tell Lucy, I am obliged to her for her transcriptions. I shall be very proud of her correspondence.

"Your aunt thinks he is full hasty." — Your aunt's a simpleton, as well as you. My service to her.

But is the d—l in the girl again? What would have become of Lady L. and me, had you not fent both letters together that relate to Greville's supposed malignance? I tremble, nevertheless, at the thought of what might have been. But I will not forgive Lucy for advising you to fend to us your horribly painted-terrors. What could posses ber to advise you to do so, and you to follow her advice? I forgive not either of you. In revenge, I will remind you, that they were good women, to whom my brother owed all the embarrassments of his past life.

But a caution, Harriet!—Never, never, let foolish dreams claim a moment of your attention—Imminent as seemed the danger, your superstition made it more dreadful to you than otherwise it would have been. You have a mind superior to such foibles: Act up to its native dignity, and let not the follies of your nurses, in your infantile state, be carried into your maturer age, to depreciate your womanly reason—Do you think I don't dream as well as you?

Well might we all rejoice in his safety. "Hang about his neck for joy!" So you ought if you thought it would do him honour. Hush, hush, proud girl! Don't scold me! I think, were a king your man, he would have been honoured by the charming freedom. "Cast himself at your feet!" And you ought to have cast yourself at his. "There can be no reserve to him after this," you say. Nor ought there, had it not been for this: Did you bliging to him, one fau out me.

Sı

out me.
Your God
thinks h dearly h ver was was; ar low, all if you ch
to come
she shall christening on both
But all

But ah her knees shall I do put her u I believe case, I th

Poor L of the gree faid the to owe us a ftance. V husbands—

The bell may forgive ture; but that made But she beyou, unless her no good lensions, if ouls of fifth not fignify to him, by letter, that you would refign to his generofity? Let me whisper you, Harriet-Sure you proud maiden minxes think-But I did once-I often wonder in my heart-But men and women are cheats to one another. But we may, in a great measure, thank the poetical tribe for the fascination. I hate them all. Are they not inflamers of the worst passions? With regard to the Epics, would Alexander, madman as he was, have been so much a madman, had it not been for Homer? Of what violences, murders, depredations, have not the Epic poets been the occasion, by propagating false honour, false glory, and false religion? Those of the amorous class ought in all ages (could their future geniusses for tinkling found and measure have been known) to have been strangled in their cradles: Abuses of talents given them for better purposes (for all this time I put facred poefy out of the question); and avowedly claiming a right to be licentious, and to overleap the bounds of decency, truth, and nature!

What a rant! How came these fellows into my rambling head? O, I remember—My whisper to you led me into all this stuff.

Well, and you at last recollect the trouble you have tgiven my brother about you. Good girl! Had I remembered that, I would have spared you my reslections upon the poets and poetasters of all ages, the truly-inspired ones excepted: And yet I think the others should have been banished our commonwealth, as well as Plato's.

Well, but to shorten my nonsense, now you have shortened yours—The day is at last fixed—Joy, joy, joy, to you, my lovely Harriet, and to my brother!
—And it must be a public affair!—Why—that's right, since it would be impossible to make it a private that it is not a private to make it a private to make vate one.

My honest man is mad for joy. He fell down on his knees, to beg of me to accept of your invitation, and of his company. I made a merit of obliging him, though I would have been as humble to him, rather than not be with you; and yet, by one faucy line, I imagine you had rather be without me.

Lion

Your cousins Reeves are ready to set out.

a

-

d

d

he

a-

he

ive

lo-

ns,

ro.

eli-

iges

and gled

for poening

unds

o my er to e you

girl!

of all

yet I

ed our

Lion

God bless you, invite aunt Nell in form: She thinks herfelf neglected. A nephew whom the fo dearly loves! Very hard! the fays.—And the never was but at one wedding, and has forgot how it was; and may never be at another-Pink and yellow, all is ready provided, go down or not-O but, if you chuse not her company, I will tell you how to come off-Give her your word and honour that the shall be a person of prime account at your first christening. Yet she would be glad to be present on both occasions.

But ah, the poor Emily! She has also been on her knees to me, to take her down with me-What shall I do?—Dear soul, she embarrasses me! I have put her upon writing to her guardian, for his leave. I believe the has written. If the knew her own case, I think she would not desire it.

Poor Lady L.!—She is robbed, the fays, of one of the greatest pleasures of her life. Ah, Charlotte! faid the to me, wringing my hand, these husbands owe us a great deal. This is an humbling circum-Were not my lord and yours the best of stance. husbands-

The best of husbands! Wretches! faid I. You may forgive yours, Caroline—You are a good creature; but not I mine. And something else I said, by, joy, that made her laugh in the midst of her lacrymals. But she begs and prays of me not to go down to—that's you, unless all should be over with her. I can do to a prisher no good; and only increase my own appresent the same of tensions, if I am with her. A blessed way two poor down fouls of fifters of us are in. Sorry fellows! invita-

And

And yet, Harriet, with such prospects as these before them, some girls leap windows, swim rivers, climb walls—Duce take their folly: Their choice is their punishment. Who can pity such rash souls as those? Thanks be praised, you, Harriet, are going on to keep in countenance the two anxious listers,

Who, having shot the gulph, delight to see Succeeding souls plunge in with like uncertainty;

Says a good man, on a still more ferious occasion.

Good news! joyful news!—I shall, I shall, go down to you. Nothing to hinder me! Lord L. proud as a peacock, is this moment come for me: I am hurrying away with him. A fine boy!—Sister safe!—Harriet, Lucy, Nancy, for your own future encouragement! Huzza, girls!—I am gone.

LETTER XXVIII.

Miss BYRON, To Lady G.

Thursday, Nov. 9.

If y aunt is so much afraid, that every thing will not be ready, that she puts me upon writing to you, to hasten what remains. I am more than half a sool—But that I always was. My spirits sink at the thoughts of so public a day. The mind, my grandmamma says, can but be full; and it would have been silled by the circumstance, had not the publicness of the day given me something more of grievance.

I am afraid, fometimes, that I shall not support my spirits; that I shall be ill—Then I think something will happen—Can it be, that I shall be the wi

Sir would private very prall pati having Nor co He doe me: A So tend be too I if you d case you

My u

Every he we dare of the g be all hi in every best dand table after cy's han toad, he Lucy (I and flour rous man at her; f

have let l

dancer in Mifs (She, no control to hear the My unclessed mext week pale, on I collecting to remind

Vel. V

the

the wife of Sir Charles Grandison? I can hardly believe it.

Sir Charles is tenderly concerned for me. It would be impossible, he fays, that the day could be private, unless I were to go to London; and the very proposing of that would put my uncle out of all patience; who prides himself in the thought of having his Harriet married from his own house: Nor could I expect my grandmamma's presence. He does all he can to assure my heart, and divert me: A thousand agreeable lively things he says: So tender, fo confiderate, in his joy !- Surely I shall be too happy. But will you come? Can you? And if you do, will you be good? Will you make my case your own?

ls

re

us

ne:

nwe

one.

9.

hing

WII-

more

y fpi-

The

and

, had

thing

pport

think

all be

the

My uncle, at times, is prodigiously head-strong. Every hour he does or fays fomething wrong; yet we dare not chide him. Thursday next will be one of the greatest days of his life, he fays; and it shall be all his own. He either fings, hums, or whiftles. in every motion. He refolves, he fays, to get his best dancing legs in readiness. He started up from table after dinner this day, and caught hold of Lucy's hand, and whisked her round the room. Dear toad, he called her; a common address of his to Lucy (I fay, because she has a jewel in her head) a and flourishing about with her in a very humorous manner, put her quite out, on purpose to laugh at her; for the would have been in, if he would have let her, for the humour-fake. He was a fine dancer in his youth.

Miss Orme breakfasted with us this morning. She, no doubt, threw herfelf in our way on purpose to hear the news of the appointed day confirmed. My uncle officiously told her, it would be one day next week. She named the very day, and turned pale, on his owning she was not mistaken. But recollecting herfelf; Now, then, faid she, is the time to remind my brother of a promise he made before Vel. VII. 110 he went abroad, to carry me to London, on a visit to some relations there. I will prevail on him, if I can, to fet out on Monday or Tuesday.

God blefs you! my dear Miss Byron, said she, at parting; may your bustle be happily over! I shall pity you. You will pay for being so universally admired. But your penance will be but for two days; the very day, and that of your appearance; and in both your man will bear you out: His merit, his person, his address.—Happy Miss Byron! The universal approbation is yours. But I must have you contrive some how, that my brother may see him before he is yours: His heart will be easier afterwards.

—Sent for down by my grandmamma.—Dear Lucy, make up the letter for me. I know you will be glad of the opportunity.

Continued by Lucy.] "Will Lady G. admit me, in this abrupt manner, into her Imperial presence? I know she will, on this joyful occasion, accept of any intelligence. The poor Harriet! my uncle Selby would invite all the country, if they came in his way. Four of my cousin's old play-fellows have already been to claim his promife. He wished, he faid, he had room for all the world; it 4 should be welcome.

"He will have the Great Barn, as it is called, cleared out; a tight large building, which is to be illuminated at night with a profusion of lights;

and there are all his tenants, and those of Shirley-manor, to be treated, with their wives.

Shirley-manor, to be treated, with their wives, and fuch of their fons and daughters as are more than twelve years old. The treat is to be a cold one. Hawkins, his steward, who is well respected by them all, is to have the direction of it. My uncle's October is not to be spared. It will cost two days at least, to roast, boil, and bake for them.

The carpenters are already fent for. Half a dozen bonfires are to be lighted up round the Great Barn;

red, preff

Si

" N admi
from
But 1

' neigh

ed at

of all

who,

troub

bustle fhe h

after a Rehear

" De idle ra

trueft

I WRIT

Barn; and the stacks of wood are not to be spared, to turn winter into summer, as my uncle ex-preffes himfelf.

"Neither the poor nor the populace are to be admitted, that the confusion almost unavoidable from a promiscuous multitude may be avoided. But notice will be given, that two houses in the neighbouring village, held by tenants of the family, and one near Shirley-manor, will be opened at twelve on Thursday, and be kept open for the rest of the day, till ten at night, for the sake of all who chuse to go together. The church-wardens are preparing a list of the poor people; who, on Friday morning, were to receive Five shillings a-piece, which Sir Charles has desired to make Ten; on condition that they shall not be troublesome on the day.

"Poor Sir Hargrave, to whom all this joyful bustle is primarily owing!—I tell Harriet, that he has not, with all her punctilio, been half punctilious enough. She should have had him, after all, on the motive of Prince Prettyman in the · Rebearfal.

"Dear madam, can your ladyship allow of this idle rattle? But I have no time to make up for it by a ceremonious conclusion; tho' I am, with the truest respect, Lady G.'s

Most obedient humble servant,

LUCY SELBY."

LETTER XXIX.

Lady G. to Miss BYRON.

Saturday, Nov. 11.

I WRITE a few lines, if, writing to you, I can write a few, by the special messenger that carries down T 2 all

I

ds;
in nis

nive fee ier

ear will

t of ncle

vilhl; it illed,

is to ghts; ie of vives, more cold fpectt. My ll colt a do-Great Barn;

them.

all the remaining apparatus which was committed to my care. We women are fad creatures for delaying things to the last moment. We hurry the men: We hurry our workmen, milleners, mantuamakers, friends, allies, confederates, and ourselves. When once we have given the day, night and day, we neither take rest nor give it : When, if we had the rare felicity of knowing our minds fooner, all might go on fair and foftly. But then the gentle passion, I doubt, would glide into insipidity. Well, and I have heard my brother fay, "That things " in general are best as they are." Why I believe fo; for all these honest fouls, as mantua-makers, attire-women, work-women, enjoy a hurry that is occasioned by a wedding, and are half as well pleafed with it, as if it were their own. They simper, fmirk, goffip over bridal finery; fpread this on their arms or shoulders; admire that-Look you here-Look ye there !- And is not this ?- Is not that? -And did you ever ?- No, never in my born days! -And is the bride, do you fay, fuch a lovely creature?—And is the bridegroom as handsome a man as the is a woman? -Olud, O dear! - Would to heaven Northamptonshire were nearer, that one might fee how charming, how graceful, how becoming! and fo forth.

And why should not we women, after all, contrive to make hurry-skurries [you see how I correct myself as I go along], and make the world think our affairs a great part of the business of it, and that nothing can be done without us! Since, after a few months are over, new noveltics take place, and we get into corners, sigh, groan, look filly and meagre, and at last are thrown into straw, as it is called; poor Caroline's case; who repines, that she can't be present on this new bustle in the family. But I am to acquaint her of every thing by pen and ink—Look to your behaviour, Harriet, on the great occasion.

But

But being would as ape him. with h with a Is plea vants v Lordfh Upon t ther. cryingto God not for now gr Wha Well The fir it runs t her gua bition v train. heart, fh rather th difcourag but there reasons; felf, havi hope the by the air whereas, the air le blaze. I perhaps i fet out on her nurse

him, that

Bei

Jou.

But a word about Caroline-Were it not for her being deprived of this pleafure, the good creature would be very happy. Lord L. and the are as fond as apes. She has quite forgot all her fufferings for him. He thanks her for his boy. She follows with her eye the little stranger, and is delighted with all that is done with him, to him, for him-Is pleased with every-body, even with the very fervants who croud in, by permission, to see his little Lordfhip, and already claim an interest in him. Upon my word the makes a very pretty fond mother. And aunt Nell, who by the way was at the crying-out, and was then fo frighted! fo thankful to God! and so happy in her own fituation. not for the world, would the be other than the was!] now grudges the nurses half their cares.

What good creatures are we women!

S.

d

all

tle

II,

gs

ve

TS,

15

ea-

er,

neir

eat?

ys!

rea-

nan

hea-

ight

ing!

con-

cor-

hink

and after

place,

y and

it 15

at flie

mily.

y pen

on the

But

Well, but I don't know what to do about Emily. The first vice of the first woman was curiofity, and it runs thro' all her daughters. She has written to her guardian, and nothing but an absolute prohibition will hinder her from making one in your train. Did the dear girl know the state of her own heart, the would chuse to be a thousand miles off, rather than go. I have fet her woman and mine to discourage her. I have reasoned with her myself; but there is no fuch thing as giving her one's true reasons; nor would I, willingly: Because she herfelf, having not found out her love to be love, I hope the fire may be fmothered in her own heart, by the aid of time and discretion, before discovery; whereas, if the doors of it were to be opened, and the air let in, it might fet the whole tenement in a blaze. Her guardian's denial or affent will come perhaps in time; yet hardly, neither; for we shall fet out on Monday. Aunt Nell is fo pleafed with her nursery of the little Peer, as the primly calls. him, that you are rid of even her wishes to be with you. Being fure of this, I told her, that your aunt.

had hinted to me her design to invite her in form; but that I had let you know, that Lady L. would not be able to live without her company, all the world, and the world's wife, attentive and engrosfed by your affair. She, good creature! was pleased—So as she could but be thought of importance by some-body, I knew she would be happy. I told her that you invited nobody, but left all to your friends—Ay, poor dear soul, said she; she has enough to think of, well as she loves your brother—And sighed for you—Worthy ancient! The sigh a little deeper, perhaps, for some of her own recollections.

Mr and Mrs Reeves would not stay for us. What will you do with us all?—Croud you, I fear. But dispose of us at Shirley-manor, or Selby-house, as you please. Yours, and aunt Selby's and grandmamma Shirley's concern for us, is all we are solicitous about. But servants' rooms, nay cocklosts, haylosts, will do. We like to be put to our shifts now-and-then—Something to talk of—

But I can tell you, if you don't know it already, Lord W. and his lady are resolved to do you homour on this occasion; but they will be but little trouble to you. My lord's steward has a half-brother, a gentleman farmer, in your neighbourhood.

—Sheldon—They will be there: But perhaps you know of this a better way. They will make a splendid part of your train. Gratitude is their inducement.

Lord L. has just now told me, that my sister, intenderness to him, and in honour to you, has befought him to be present. O Harriet! what will you do with yoursels?—Aunt Nell and I have the heartburn for you. But Lord L. must be welcome: He is one of those who so faithfully kept your secret.

So, in our equipages, will be Lord L. my honest man, Emily, and your Charlotte: Lord L's equipages pages will or permit the nulady h

My attend

My He doe
will be ceptedhimfel faid I—Inde
cafm in be—A nition fraid to leaven, my hea
the pen

Adie into you The ma pain alfo you fo a with yo heart.

end.

Lucy your con nants' d affair m

Neith I hope I whereve figure, pages will be at the fervice of any of your guests; as will our spare one-I wish our Beauchamp could permit himself to be present (I hope he will) on the nuptials of the friend fo dear to him, with a lady he fo greatly admires.

My woman and Emily's will be all our female attendants: One nook will ferve them both.

1-

r-

y .

to

as

er

th ol-

at ir.

ſe,

nd

are k-

ur

dy,

10-tle

re-

od.

you

e a

in-

, in

be-

will

the welkept

nelt

qui-

ages

My poor man will be mad, before the day comes. He does love you, Harriet. My brother, he fays, will be the happiest man in the world-himself excepted-A hypocrite! He just popt this in to fave himself-Why dost make this exception, friend? faid I—Thou knowest it to be a mere compliment -Indeed, indeed (two indeeds, which implied that one might have been doubted) I am now (a farcasm in his word now) as happy as mortal man can be-Ah, flatterer! and shook my head-A recognition of my fovereignty, however, in his being afraid to speak his conscience. A little of the old leaven, Harriet !- I can't help it. It is got out of my heart, half out of my head; but, when I take the pen, it will tingle now and then at my finger's end.

Adieu, my love !- God bless you !- I can enter into your joy. A love fo pure, and fo fervent. The man Sir Charles Grandison. And into your pain also, in a view of a solemnity so near, and to you fo awful. With all my roguery, I sympathize with you. I have not either a wicked or unfeeling Such as yours, however, are the true spirits; fuch as mine are only bully and flash.

Lucy, you are a good girl. I like the whim of your concluding for Harriet. I also like your tenants' dining-room, and other managements, as the affair must unavoidably be a public one.

Neither of you fay a word of good Mr Déane. I hope he is with you. He cannot be a cypher wherever he comes, except on the right-fide of the figure, to increase its consequence. Don't be afraid

afraid of your uncle : I, I, I will manage him, never fear.

There are other passages, Harriet, in your last letter, which I ought to have answered to-But forgive me, my dear! I had laid it by (tho' pleafed with it in the main); and, having answered the most material part, by dispatching your things, forgot it as much as if I had not received it, till the moment I came to conclude. Once more, Adieu, my dearest Harriet.

CH. G.

LETTER XXX.

Miss JERVOIS, To Sir CHARLES GRANDISON.

MO fooner, dear and honoured Sir, is one boon granted me, but I have a series one I blush as I write, for my troublesomeness. I told you, Sir, I had furnished myself with new cloaths, on a very joyful occasion-Indeed it is on a very joyful occasion. You would lay me under a new obligation to your goodness, if you would be pleased to allow me to attend Lady G. in her journey down. I shall know by this fresh favour, that you have quite forgiven your dutiful ward. I presume not to add another word-But I dare fay, dear Miss Byron, that now is, will not be against it, if you are not .- God bless you, my honoured good Sir-But God, I hope, I am fure, will blefs you; and fo thall I, as furely I ought, whether you grant this favour, or not, to

Your ever obliged, and grateful EMILY JERVOIS.

LETTER

thin by t give affui mot heig

A ever love her grie belo vain If ther

hear

M gave ted proa mile hear to a migl a nu to m

LETTER XXXI.

Sir CHARLES GRANDISON, To Miss JERVOIS.

die

.

e u,

on et

ld

15,

V-

li-

to

n.

is

are

But

all

ur,

115.

R

Sunday, Nov. 12.

I T would give me great pain to deny to my good Miss Jervois the grant of any request she shall think fit to make to me. You shall know, you say, by the grant of this favour, that I have quite forgiven my ward—Was such a test wanted, my dear? I assure you, that what you have lately done for your mother, though I was not consulted in it, has heightened my opinion of the worthiness of your heart.

As to your request, I have pleasure in leaving every-thing relating to the happy event to my beloved Miss Byron and her friends. I will entreat her to under-write her mind on this subject. She grieves that the solemnity cannot be private; which, beloved as she is in this neighbourhood, would be vain to attempt.

If her aunt has no objection from want of room, there cannot, my dear Emily, be any from

Your affectionate and true friend

CHARLES GRANDISON.

Underwritten.

My dearest Miss Jervois will excuse me, that I gave her not a formal invitation, when I intimated my wishes for Lady G.'s presence on the approaching solemn occasion, though at so many miles distance. It is a very solemn one. One's heart, my dear, cannot be so much disengaged, as to attend to invitations for the very day, as it might on its anniversary. We shall have too great a number of friends. O my dear! can you bear to make one in so large a company? I shall not be able.

able to attend to any of my friends on the day: No, not to you, my love. Can you bear with my inattention to every-body, to every subject, but one? Can you desire to see your Harriet (joyful as the occasion is, and the chosen wish of her heart) look and behave like a foolish creature? If you can, and Lady G. will take charge of my lovely young friend, all mine will rejoice in being able to contribute to your pleasure, as well as

Your ever-affectionate
HARRIET BYRON.

LETTER XXXIL

Lady G. To Lady L.

Selby-house, Tuesday, Nov. 14.

WELL, my sister, my friend, my dear Lady L. how do you? As well as can be expected, I hope: The answer of a thousand years old, to every enquirer, careful or ceremonious. And how does my dear little boy? As well as can be expected, too—I am glad of it.

Here we are !- Every body well, and happy.

I was afraid my brother would have looked more polite upon us than familiar, as he invited us not: But no!—He was all himself, as Harriet says. He met us at the coach-door. He handed out his ward. She could not speak. Tears were in her eyes. I could have beat her with my san. He kissed her cheek. My dear child, I thank you most sincerely for your goodness to your mother.

I was afraid that her joy would then have been too much for her. She expanded, she collected her plumes. Her spread arms (soon, however, closed) shewed me, that she with difficulty restrained herfelf from falling at his seet. He turned from her to me.
ney,
out, a My d gratu him a life of (my neft met ney much abafh fweet The only wind

plied

tears Ha vexed each

ftifle

Ta ward Her

ly hea

threw (fittin waift the tr me. My best Charlotte, how do you? The journey, I hope, has not incommoded you. He led me out, and, taking each of the honest men by the hand, My dear lords, you do me honour. He then congratulated Lord L. on the present you had made him and the family.

At the inner gate met us our sweet Harriet, with joy upon one brow, half the cares of this mortal life on the other. She led us into the cedar-parlour (my brother returning to welcome in the two honelt men), and threw her arms about my neck—My dearest Lady G. how much does your presence rejoice me!—I hope (and looked at me) your journey—Be quiet, Harriet. You must not think so much of these matters, my love. She was a little abashed. Don't be afraid of me; I will be very good, said I. Then will I be very thankful, replied the.

My lovely Emily, turning to her: How does my fweet friend? Welcome, once more, to Selby-house.

The girl's heart was full. She (thanking her only by a deep courtefy) abruptly withdrew to the window; and, trying for a third hem, in hopes to stifle her emotion, it broke into a half-fob, and tears followed.

Harriet and I looked; she compassionately, I vexedly, I believe; and both shook our heads at each other.

Take no notice, faid I, feeing Harriet move towards the window to her—It will go off of itself. Her joy to see her Harriet, that's all.

But I must take notice (for the found that Emily heard her)—My dear Emily, my lovely young friend-why-

d, e-

W

d,

re

t:

ys.

his es.

ner

ely

een

her

ed)

er-

to

me.

I will tell you, madam, interrupted she, and threw her arms about Harriet's neck, as Harriet (sitting in the window) classed hers about her waist; and I will tell you truth, and nothing but the truth—You wrote so cool to me about my coming

ing—And yet I to come! But I could not help it —And I thought you now looked a little feverely upon me—But love, and I will fay, duty to you, my dearest Miss Byron, and Nothing else, made me so earnest to come. Say you forgive me.

Forgive you, my dearest Emily!—I had only your sake, my dear, in view. If I wrote with less warmth than you expected, forgive me. Consider my situation, my love. You are, and ever will be, welcome to me. Your griefs, your joys are mine—

Give me which you pleafe.

The girl burst into fresh tears—I, I, I am now as unable, sobbed she, to bear your goodness, as before I was your displeasure—But hide, hide me! Here comes my guardian!—What now, when he sees me thus, will become of me?

She heard his voice at the door, leading in the two lords; and they followed by Mr Selby, Mrs Selby, Lucy, Nancy.

Sir Charles went to the two young ladies. Harriet kept her feat, her arms folded about Emily.

Sweet emotion! faid he: My Emily in tears of joy!

—What a charming picture!—O my Miss Byron, how does your tenderness to this amiable child oblige me! I sever you not; clasping his generous arms about them both.

I have afflicted my dear Emily, Sir, without intending it. I wrote coldly, my precious young friend thinks; and her love for me makes her fweetly fentible of my supposed ingratitude. But believe me, my dear, I love you with a true sisterly tenderness.

I took the dear girl aside, and gently expostulated with her upon the childishness of her behaviour, and the uneasiness she would give to Miss Byron, as well as to herself, by repetitions of the like weakness of mind.

She more fair. vice; might that n for my me, I

Miffuncle ther, i had no Harrie wrote, meddle that I Harrie rior to poor fi haved much i have, cern th fuscept would the fu hearing fed gree woman

Emi

Mr broad Our mi event, delighte haviour have no ways fa

She Vol.

She promised sair; but, Lady L. I wish there were more of the child, and less of the woman, in this assair. Poor thing! she was very thankful for my advice; and expressed how wrong she was, because it might discourage her guardian and Miss Byron, that now was, from letting her live with them: But for my life, said she, whatever was the matter with me. I could not help my soolishness.

it

ly

u,

de

ly

is

er

e,

as

re

ere

me

wo

by,

ar-

of

By-

ild

ous

in-

ing

her

But

erly ated

our,

eak-

She

Miss Nancy Selby took Emily up with her; and uncle Selby and I had a little lively hit at each other, in the old stile. We drew my brother in. I had not tried his strength a good while: But, as Harriet said in one of the sauciest letters she ever wrote, I soon found he was the wrong person to meddle with. Yet he is such a charming rallier, that I wonder he can rest his talent. No wonder, Harriet would say; because he has talents so superior to that which, she says, runs away with his poor sister.

Emily came down to us very composed, and behaved prettily enough: But had my brother as much mannish vanity as some of the forry sellows have, who have no pretence for it, he would discern the poor Emily's soible to have some little susceptibility in it. I am glad he does not; for it would grieve him. I have already told him of the sufferings of poor Lady Anne S. on her hearing he is near marriage; and he expressed great concern upon it for that really worthy woman.

Mr Reeves, his wife, and Mr Deane, were abroad when we arrived. They came in to tea. Our mutual congratulations on the expected happy event, cheared our own hearts, and would have delighted yours. Charming, charming is the behaviour of my brother to his bride-elect. You can have no notion of it; because at Colnebrook we always saw him acting under a restraint; owing, as

Vol. VII. U fince

fince we have found, to honour, conscience, and a prior love.

He diverts and turns the course of subjects that he thinks would be affecting to her, yet in fuch a manner as it is hardly perceiveable to be his intention to do fo: For he makes fomething of the begun ones contribute to the new ones; fo that, before uncle Selby is aware of it, he finds himfelf in one that he had not in his head when he fet out. -And then he comes with his "What a pize was · I going to fay? But this is not what I had in my And then, as my brother knows he misses his scent, only because it has not afforded the merry mortal fomething to laugh at, he furnishes him with some lively and innocent occasion which produces that effect, and then Mr Selby is fatisfied. Mrs Selby and Lucy fee how my brother manages him, and are pleased with it; for it is fo delicately done, that fomething arifes from it that keeps the honest man in credit with himself and with every body elfe, for his good humour, good heart, and those other qualities which make him in his worst subjects tolerable, and in his best valuabie.

Venerable Mrs Shirley is to be here all to-morrow and next day. Mr Deane has chosen Shirleymanor for his abode for the time he stays; so has James Selby, in order to make more room at Selby-house for us women. There too Mr and Mrs Reeves take up, of choice, their lodgings, though here all day.

Poor Harriet! She told me once, that fear makes cowards loving. She is so fond of me and Lucy, and her aunt at times, it would be a sin not to pity her. Yet Lucy once tossed up her head upon my saying so—Pity her! why, yes, I think I do, now you have put me in the head of it: But I don't know whether she is not more to be envied. Lucy is a polite girl. She loves her Harriet. But to my

ting,

Th WI Is Ev

Ah fillier We

Th next of Piff

me a fo.

Aw plime Let

not. per un

Em would fo her wards nary i

Mr ter air facetic I thin a fine, shrews pect: ter.—

rather

fhe

fhe knew I should be pleased with the compliment to my brother.

Harriet has just now looked in upon me—Writing, Lady G. and of me?—To Lady L. I suppose?

She clasped her arms about me: Ah, madam!

Thursday! Thursday! What of Thursday?

Is the day after to-morrow!

Every child can tell that, Harriet.

Ah but I, with fuch happiness before me, am fillier than a child!

Well, but I can tell you fomething, Harriet.

What is that?

That the next day to Thursday is Friday-The next day to that is Saturday—The next—

Pish! I shall stay no longer with you; giving me a gentle tap—I would not have answered you so.

Away she tript, desiring her affectionate compliments to dear Lady L.

Let me see! Have I any more to write? I think not. But a call for supper makes me leave my paper unsubscribed.

EMILY behaved very prettily at supper; but it would have been as well, if she had not thought so herself: For she boasted of her behaviour afterwards to me. That made it look like an extraordi.

nary in her own account.

Mr Selby fung us a fong, with a good fox-hunter air. There is fomething very agreeable in his facetiousness; but it would become nobody else. I think you and I agreed at Dunstable, that he is a fine, jolly, hearty, handsom-is man—He looks shrewd, arch, open, a true country-gentleman aspect: what he says is so so—what he means is better.—He is very fond of your lord—But I think rather fonder of mine—A criterion, Lady L.!

U 2 As

d

neein

a

in it. as ny he ed

on is for om

felf ur, ake

selt

oreyhas

Sel-Mrs ugh

kes icy, pipon do,

ut I vied.
But

As for Lord G. he is in the fituation of Harriet's Singleton—He is prepared to laugh the moment Mr Selby opens his mouth, especially when he twists his neck about, turns a glass upside down, and looks under his bent brows, at the company round, yet the table always in his eye: For then we know, that something is collected, and ready to burst forth.

Well, good night! good night! good night!— Has my godfon elect done crying yet? What a duce has te to cry at? Unfwaddled, unpinioned, unfwathed legs and arms at full liberty: But they fay crying does good to the brats—opens their pipes—and fo forth—But tell him, that if he does not learn to laugh as well as to cry, he shall not be related to

CHARLOTTE G.

LETTER XXXIII.

Lady G. In Continuation.

Wednesday, Nov 15.

Wednesday, Nov 15.

EDNISDAY is come, and, as Harriet tays, to-morrow is Thursday. Ah, Harriet! rich as content! poor as patience!

I have been talking to her: Half-comforting her, half-laughing at her. She fays I am but half-

good.

All the world is come.—Lord W. and his everagreeable lady. Beauchamp, as I am alive, with them! I wish I could see this rogue Emily in love with him. He is certainly in love with her.

" I know it-I know it !- Do you go down about your bufinefs."

Only Lord G. come to tell me what I knew before.

Harriet's

has h

· Do

our

Lord gers of fignifi

felf.

TH

Barcl fo, this Sir C. and r uncle. ked. and y dow,

De:

Ver an

Go all wi

Sir rable with t

content of tin

Harriet's gone down to be complimented. She has hardly fpirits to compliment.

"Well, well, I'll only tell Lady L. who is come.

Does not the poor foul keep her bed? And are we not to be as complaifant to our ill friends as our well !- I am coming, child."

Emily, with her pretty impertinence. Neither Lord G. nor Emily can be any thing when strangers come, and I stand not by them to shew their signification.

Duce! a third messenger-O! Mrs Selby her-felf. I'll tell you more by and by, Lady L. "Your fervant, Mrs Selby. I attend you."

The two Miss Nedhams, Miss Watson, Miss-Barclay, the two Misses Holles, Mr Deane—"So, of so, fo, Harriet, said I, what is the meaning of this?"—My uncle's doings! I have no spirits. Sir Charles should not have been so passive: He, and nobody else, could have prevailed upon my uncle. My aunt has held him in till her arms aked. O the dear restive man! She has now let go; and you see how he prances over the whole meadow, the reins upon his neck.

Dear girl! faid I, I am glad you are fo fanciful.

I would fain be lively if I could, faid she. Never any creature had more reason, Lady G.—My heart is all gratitude, and, I will say, love.

Good girl, hold up your head, my dear, and all will be as it should be.

Sir Charles staid to attend hither the most venerable of women. Mr and Mrs Reeves are to come with them.

You must, as you expect me to be minute, becontent with bits and scraps, written by fnatches of time. I pity you for your still life, my dear Lady L. and think your request, that I will so 5. iays,

U 3 write

Iar-

mo-

hen

wn,

any hen

ady

!-

at a ned,

they heir

does

rting halt-

with love

down w beriet's

write as to make you suppose yourself on the spot, a reasonable one.

Here is come the man of men!

WITH what respect (all his respect has love in it) did he attend Mrs Shirley to her seat! And then hastening to Lord and Lady W. he saluted them both, and acknowledged the honour done him by their presence; an honour, he said, that he could not have expected, nor therefore had the thought, the distance so great, of asking it.

He then paid his compliments, in the most affectionate manner, to his amiable friend Beauchamp; who, on his thanking him for his uninvited presence, said, he could not deny himself being present at a solemnity that was to complete the happiness of the best of men, and best of friends.

Sir Charles addressed himself to the young ladies who were most strangers to him; apologizing to them, as they were engaged with Mr Selby, Mr Deane, and Lord G. that he did not at first. He sat a few minutes with them: What he said I heard not; but they smiled, blushed, and looked delighted upon each other. Every body followed him in his motions with their eye. So much presence of mind never met with so much modesty of behaviour, and so charming a vivacity.

The young ladies came only intendedly to break-fast, and that at Mr Selby's odd invitation. They had the good sense to apologize for their coming this day, as they were to make part of the cavalcade, as I may call it, to-morrow. But the odd soul had met the four at a neighbouring lady's where he made a gossiping visit, and would make them come with him.

I observed, that nobody cared to find fault with him; so I began to rate him; and a very whim-

eve mi no

fica

roc

no tur fay per ye

(b

at

fel we gr the the in fav yo in

H

ter

fill M w an did ly m

pr an tio fical dialogue passed between us at one end of the room.

I made the honest man ashamed of himself, and every body in our circle was pleased with us. This misled me to go on; and so, by attending to his nonsense, and pursuing my own, I lost the opportunity of hearing a conversation, which, I dare say, would have been worth repeating to you by pen and ink. Harriet shall write, and give it you.

Mr Orme and his fifter, we are told, fet out yesterday for London. Mrs Selby and Harriet are vet afraid of Greville.

The gentlemen and fome of the ladies, myself (but not Harriet) among them, have been to look at the preparations made in the leffer park, for the reception of the tenants. Mr Selby prided himfelf not a little on his contrivances there. we returned, we found Harriet at one end of the great parlour, fitting with Emily; her grandmother, Mrs Selby, Lucy, in conversation at the other; the good girl's hand in hers, Emily blushing, looking down, but delighted, as it feemed; Harriet, with fweetness, love, and compassion, intermingled in her aspect, talking to her, and bending over her her fine neck. I thought I never faw her look fo lovely. Elder fifter like, and younger, one instructing in love, the other liftening with pleasure.

They took every body's attention, as the room filled with the company, who all crowded about Mrs Shirley, affecting not to heed the two friends. What would I give, faid Lady W. to Sir Charles and her lord, for a picture of those two young ladies [Emily just then kissed the hand of her lovely friend with emotion, and Harriet listed up Emily's to her lips], if love, dignity, and such expression, could be drawn in the face of one lady, and that reverence, gratitude, and modest attention in the other? I congratulate you, Sir Charles,

with hen hem by ould ght,

ot,

it)

afeauninnfelf plete t of Mr He heard ightm in te of

They ming avale odd lady's make with whimfical with all my heart. I have observed with rapture, from every look, every word, and from the whole behaviour of Miss Byron, that your goodness to hundreds will be greatly recompensed. O my good Lord W. turning to him, Miss Byron will pay all our debts.

Every attitude, every look of Miss Byron's, said my lord, would furnish out a fine picture. Whereever she is, I cannot keep my eye from following her.

My brother bowed delighted.

How pleased was Mrs Shirley, Mrs Selby— Every body! But what a different man is lord W. to what he once was! listed up from low keeping, to a wife, who, by her behaviour, good fense, politeness, gives him consequence. Once I thought him one of the lowest of men. I denied him, in my heart, a relation to my mother, and thought him a savage.

The two young ladies, finding themselves obferved, stood up in a parting posture; but Emily, seeming eager to detain her dear friend's attention, Harriet took a hand of Emily's in each of hers.

I had fidled that way—Yes, my dear, faid the lovely Harriet, a friendship unalterable, as you say, by time of fate. Dearest Emily, command me ever.

Emily looked about her—O madam, I want to kneel to you. I will ever, ever—My good Lady G. said Harriet, approaching me, one of Emily's hands in hers, we have promised a friendship that is to continue to the end of our lives. We are to tell each the other all her faults. How causelestly has my Emily been accusing herself—The most ingenuous of human hearts is hers.

She left Emily's hand in mine, and bent towards Mrs Shirley, and the whole circle of friends furrounding her chair.

O my

as '

(fu nev

I b cep

ter

cio

felf

for her the

My

par

ma

ferv

wan

was tem

wer

ly!

the Ho

mad

turi

liev

ferv

will

F

O my dear Lady G.! faid Emily, whisperingly, as we followed the meek-eyed goddess of wisdom (fuch her air, her manner, her amiableness, seemed in my thought, at that time, to make her), never, never, was fuch graciousness! I cannot bear her goodness. What a happy creature shall I be, if I follow her example, and observe her precepts !- You cannot, my dear, faid I, have a better guide: But, love, you must not be capricious, as you were at first coming. She professed she would not. I have been excusing myfelf to her, madam, faid the dear girl, and am forgiven.

My brother met the lovely creature. He took her hand, and, leading her towards her grandmother, we have been attentive, my dearest life, to you and Emily. You love her: She adores you. My Beauchamp, you know not the hundredth part of the excellencies of this admirable woman.

le

0 d

11 d

eg rd

W

bd

I

ed

nd

by,

n-

of id

ou

nd

nt

dy

's nat

to ef-

oft

0-ds

ny

You were born for each other. God preferve you both, for an example to a world that wants it.

Harriet courtefied to Beauchamp. Her face was overspread with a fine crimson; but she attempted not to speak. She squeezed herself, as it were, between the chairs of her grandmamma and aunt; then turned about, and looked fo charmingly! Miss Jervois, Sir, faid she, to my brother, has the best of hearts. She deserves your kind care. How happy is she in such protection!

And how much happier will she be in yours, madam! replied he. Of what a care, my Emily, turning to her, has this admirable lady already relieved my heart! The care the greater, as you deferve it all. In every thing take her direction: It will be the direction of love and prudence. What an amiable companion will you make her! and how happy will your love of each other make me!

Emily got behind me, as it were. Speak for me to my guardian; promife for me, madam—You never, never shall break your word through my fault.

Beauchamp was affected. Graciousness, said he, looking at Harriet, and goodness, looking at Emily, how are they here united! What a happy man will he be, who can intitle himself to a lady formed upon fuch an example!

A fun-beam from my brother's eye feemed to play upon his face, and dazzle his eyes. The fine youth withdrew behind Lady W.'s chair. Mr Selby, who had been fo good as to give us his filent attention, then spoke, with a twang through his note. Adad, adad, said he, I do not know what to make of myself—But go on, go on; I love to hear you.

Your good lord, my dear, enjoyed the pleasure we all had: Mine tossed up his head, and seemed to snuff the wind: And yet, my dear Lady Lathere was nothing so very extraordinary said; but the manner was the thing, which shewed a meaning that left language behind it.

My brother is absolutely passive as to the economy of the approaching solemnity. Mrs Shirley, Mrs Selby, Lady W. your Charlotte, and Lucy, are the council appointed; but uncle Selby will put in, to marshal this happy proceeding. What a pize, he says, is not Harriet his daughter? Will it not be his day?

Mrs Selby tries to smile off his oddity; but now and then we see her good-naturedly redden at it, as if for his sake. Lucy looks at her uncle as if she could hardly excuse his particularities; but Mrs Shirley has always something to say for him. She enters into his character: She knows the honesty, as well as generosity, of his heart: That it for home:
him
his cit is to ing Char
away rathe

all pr

her of at he filly! you to would hand Lady abou

the n ladies Mr S men, Selby fport. Holle Rober a nep ties, Rerej Sir T fhining Lo jewel faid,

what

virtu

all proceeds from joy and love; and always allows for him—as I would have my friends allow for me: And, to fay truth, I, for my own part, like him the better for wanting allowances; because his case, in that respect, is mine. Ah, my dear! it is the thoughtful, half-assep, half-awake, blinking cat, that catches the mouse. Such as your Charlotte, with their kittenish tricks, do but fright away the prey; and, if they could catch it, had rather play with it than kill it.

Harriet is with her virgins: Her dress is left to her own choice. I stept in just now—She met me at her dressing-room door, and looked so lovely! so silly! and so full of unmeaning meaningness [Do you understand me, Lady L.?] She sighed—What would my Harriet say to me? said I, taking her hand—I don't know; again sighed—But love me,

Lady G.

d

it

y

ly

to ne

Ir

fi.

gh

VIC

I.

ire

ied

L.

out

III-

co-

ey,

cy,

will bat

Vill

but

n at e as

but

im.

ho-

at it

Can I help it? faid I; and; putting my arms about her, kiffed her cheek.

Uncle Selby has provided feven gentlemen of the neighbourhood, to match the number of their ladies; for there will be fixteen of us: Mr Godfrey, Mr Steele, Mr Falconbridge, three agreeable young men, fons of gentlemen in the neighbourhood, Mr Selby's chosen friends and companions in his fieldsports; his cousin Holles, brother to the Misses Holles, an admirer of Miss Nedham; young Mr Roberts, an admirer of Miss Barclay; Mr Allestree, a nephew of Sir John, a young man of fine qualities, engaged to Miss Dolly Nedham; and Lord Reresby of Ireland (related to Mr Selby's favourite, Sir Thomas Falconbridge), a young nobleman of thining parts, great modesty, good-nature, and, what is worth them all, Mr Shirley fays, a man of virtue.

Lord W. was very defirous of giving fo rich a jewel as Harriet to his nephew, in return, as he faid, for as rich a jewel which he had prefented to him; but Mr Selby would not admit of that. I told him, on his appeal to me, that he was right, once in his life.

S

Mr Selby talks much of the music he has provided for to-morrow. He speaks of it as a band, I affure you.

We have had a most agreeable evening. My brother was the foul of the company. His address to his Harriet was respectfully affectionate, yet, for her fake, not very peculiar. Every body, in turn, had his kindest notice, and was very happy in it. To-morrow's folemnity was often hinted at by Mr Selby, and even by my flippant lord-But Sir Charles always infenfibly led to more general subjects; and this supported the spirits of the too-thoughtful Harriet, and she behaved, on the whole, very prettily. His joy vifibly was joy; but it seemed to be of so familiar and easy a nature, as if it would last.

He once occasionally told the happy commencement of his acquaintance with Miss Byron; on purpose, I saw, to remind her, that he ought not to be thought of as a stranger to her, and to engage her in easy familiarity. But there was a delicacy observed by him in his remembrance. He began not from the time that he rescued her from Sir Hargrave; but from the first visit she made me in St James's-square; though she, with great gratitude, carried it back to its real date.

Mrs Shirley retired foon, as is her custom, her Harriet attending her. The old lady is lame, and infirm; but, as she sits, is a very fine woman; and every body fees that she was once a beauty. thought I never faw beauty in full bloom fo beautiful as when it supported beauty in ruins, on the old lady's retiring, with a face so happy, leaning one arm on her lovely grandchild, a neat crutchflick

the g Th strain ny y crowi about unhar made that chear Harri height the ha fiders when

> Ha ful tha mothe brothe allowe

her.

Ha girl to upon lovely the bel

We A nev every g

You Lady 1 hearts. Moft a comp VOL. flick in the other, lightening her weight to the delicately formed supporter of her old age. It was fo striking a picture, that every foul, all standing up, from reverence, on her retreating, observed it; nor took off their eyes till the door thut out the graceful figures.

The old lady's lameness is owing, it seems, to a strained finew, got in leading up a dance, not many years ago, proposed by herself, in order to crown the reconciliation which the had brought about, between a couple that had, till then, been unhappy; and which her good-nature and joy made her not sensible of till she sat down. that any thing should have hurt so benign, so chearful, fo benevolent a woman! Why did not Harriet tell us this circumstance? It would have heightened our value for her: And the more, if the had told us, as is the truth, that the never confiders it as a hurt (fo honourably come by) but when the thinks the is troublefome to those about her.

Harriet returned to the company more chearful than when she left it, enriched with her grandmother's bleffings, and prayers for her and my brother (as the whifpered me), and in having been allowed to support the tottering parent.

Harriet, faid I, aloud, you were a very naughty girl to accuse me, as once you did, of reflecting upon age. You never, in my eyes, looked more lovely than you did half an hour ago, supporting the best of old ladies.

We are all of your ladyship's mind, said lady W. A new grace, believe me, my dear, shone out in every graceful feature.

Your kind notice, ladies, bowing to me and Lady W. does me honour; but more to your own

Most gracefully does the girl receive and return a compliment; but this, Lady L. I need not now VOL. VII.

ht, rond,

at.

My adecar. ind nity my bly ted fhe VIliar

iceon not to as a nce.

her the with her and and 1 eauthe

ning itchflick fay to you: We have both admired her on these occasions. How happy will she make a man, who can be so fensible of his happiness! And how happy will he make her! He, who has the most grateful and enlarged of human hearts!

Soon after tea [I tell you things out of courfe, Lady L. as they come into my head we most of us withdrew, to hear read the marriage articles: When they were ready to fign, Harriet was fent for in. She would not come before. She begged, the prayed the might not. The first line of each claufe, and the laft, for form-fake, were run over, by Mr Deane, as fast as he could read. How the dear creature trembled when she came in, and all the time of the shortened reading! But when the pen was given her to write her name, she dropt it on the parchment, out of her trembling hand. Sir Charles faw her emotion with concern; and held her up, as she stood. My dearest life, said he, take time-Be composed-putting the pen with reverence in her fingers.

She tried to write; but her pen would not touch the parchment, so as to mark it. She soon, bowever, made another effort, his arm round her waist—She then signed them; but Sir Charles held her hand, and the parchments in them, when she delivered them.— 'As your act and deed, 'my dearest love?' faid Sir Charles.— 'Yes, indeed,' replied she, and made him a courtsey; hardly knowing what she did.

She must hear of this, when she can bear it. You charged me to be very minute on the behaviour of our Harriet: You was sure it would be a pattern. But, no; you see she is too timid.

She accompanied me to my chamber when we retired for the night. She fighed. I took notice of it.—O my Charlotte, faid she, to-morrow!

Will

Harr have fenfe night

Tr befor oblig

Do

o know

you vince

Be I ment morr what

I like a a tai you; lent,

Is should for a I wo

TI

broth trans moth one of me to there will Will be the beginning of your happiness, my Harriet!—What virgin heart, said I, but must have had joy, on her contemplating the man of sense and politeness, had his behaviour of this night only been the test of her judgment of him?

True; and I have joy: But the circumstance before me is a solemn one: And does not the obligation lie all on his fide?

Does he behave to you, my love, as if he thought any of it did?

hefe nan,

And

the urfe,

oft of

cles:

fent

ged,

each

over,

the

d all

the opt it held

he,

with

not foon,

d her harles

when deed, es, in-

rtiey;

You

our of attern.

en we rrow!

Sir

O no, no! But the fact is otherwise; and as I know it, the obligation is heightened by his polite goodness to me.

Dearly does he love his Harriet (to-morrow will you be his Harriet for life). Are you not convinced that he loves you?

I am, I am! But— But what, my dear?

I never can deferve him. Hapless, hapless Clementina! she only could! Let a fortnight after to-morrow be over, and she be not un-happy, and what a thrice happy creature shall I be!

I kissed her glowing cheek—Support yourself like a heroine to-morrow, my dear. You will have a task, because of the crowds which will attend you; but it is the tax you pay for being so excellent, and so much beloved.

Is it not strange, Lady G. that my grandmamma should join to support my uncle in his vehemence for a public day? Had it been only his command,

I would have rebelled!

The pride they take in the alliance with my brother, not for his fituation in life, but for his transcendent merit, is their motive; your grand-mother's particularly. She confiders the day as one of the happiest of her life: She has begged of me to support you in undergoing it. She says, if there should be a thousand spectators, she knows it will give pleasure to as many hearts; and to hers

X 2

Will

the more, for that reason. And you will be, continued I, so lovely a pair, when joined, that every beholder, man and woman, will give him to you, you to him.

You are very good, my dear Lady G. to encourage me thus: But I told my grandmother this night, that she knew not the hardship she had imposed on me, by insisting on a public day; but I would not begin so great a change, whatever it cost me, by an act of opposition and disobedience to the will of so dear a parent. But your brother, my dear Lady G. continued she, who would have thought he would have given into it?

As your friends mean a compliment to my brother, replied I, so he, by his acquiescence, means one to you, and to them. He is not a confident man: He looks upon marriage in as awful a light as you do; but he is not shy of making a public declaration of his love to the woman he has chosen. He has told me, talking of this very subject, that public ceremony is not what, for your delicacy-sake, he would have proposed: But being proposed, he would not, by any means, decline it. He had no concern but for you; and he took your acquiescence as a noble instance of your duty and obligingness to one of the most assectionate and worthy of parents.

O my dear Lady G. how good was you to come down! Support me in the arduous task of to-morrow!——You will not want my support, my love; you will have Sir Charles Grandison bound, both by duty and love, to support you.

She threw her arms about me: I will endeavour to behave as I ought, in a circumstance that shall intitle me to such protection, and to such a Sister.

My fidgetting lord thrust in (unsent for) his sharp face; and I chiding him for his intrusion, she slipt away, or I had designed to attend her to her chamber; and there, perhaps, should we have staid I do reft. fo h love

flaic

very tuni exec

O r how exar is!

B

fit. com noth and And mini call, man up fat G

OL

the

onery

ou,

ou-

this im-

at I r it

ence

her,

ave

my nce,

con-

wful

ig a

has very

our eing

e it.

your

and

and ome

nor-

ove:

both

fhall ter. his fion, er to have Naid flaid together most part of the night. If I had, I don't suppose that I should deprived her of any rest. What makes my soolish heart throb for her? so happy as she is likely to be!—But sincerely do I love her.

I should have told you, that Emily behaved very prettily. Mr Beauchamp had a rich opportunity to engage her, while the settlements were executing.

On our return to them, the poor girl was wiping her eyes. How now, Emily? faid I foftly. O madam, Mr Beauchamp has been telling me how ill Sir Harry is! His own eyes fet mine the example. How I pity him! And how good he is! No wonder my guardian loves him.

Beauchamp may possibly catch her in a weeping sit. The heart, softened by grief, will turn to a comforter. Our own grief produces pity for another: Pity, love. They are next neighbours, and will call in to ask kindly how a sufferer does: And what a heart must that be, that will not administer comfort when it makes its neighbourly call, if comfort be in its power?

'Lord G. you are very impertinent.' I am in the scribbling vein, my Caroline. And here this man—'Say another word, Lord G. and I'll sit 'up all night—Well, well, now you return not fauciness for threatening, I will have done.'

Good night—Good morrow rather, Lady L.— O Lady L.! Good morrow may it be!

CH. G.

LETTER XXXIV.

Lady G.
Miss Selby, To Lady L.

Thursday Morning, Nov. 16.

YOU shall find me, my dear fister, as minute as you wish. Lucy is a charming girl. For the humour's sake, as well as to forward each other, on the joyful occasion, we shall write by turns.

It would look as if we had determined upon a public day, in the very face of it, were we to appear in full dreffes: The contrary, therefore, was agreed upon yesterday. But every one, however, intends to be dreffed as elegantly as morning-dreffes can make them. Harriet, as you shall hear, is the least shewy. All in virgin white. She looks, she moves an angel. I must go to the dear girl.— Lucy, where are you?

'Here, madam—But how can one write when one's thoughts---'

'Write as I bid you. Have I not given you 'your cue?'

Lucy, taking up the pen.] Dear Lady L. I am in a vast hurry. Lord W. Lady W. and Mr Beauchamp are come. Sir Charles, Mr Deane, Mr and Mrs Reeves, have been here this half-hour. Has Lady G. dated?—No, I protest! We women are above such little exactnesses. Dear Lady L.! the gentlemen and ladies are all come. They say the church-yard is crouded with more of the living than of the dead, and there is hardly room for a spade. What an image, on such a day! We arc

ar

For my ho

bet

Ch

au

an bra rie

not

Go

lov

con

cha

·I

6 m

cy,

· uj ti ti

upo

ing bro

mai

are all out of our wits between joy and hurry. My cousin is not well; her heart misgives her! Foolish girl!—She is with her grandmamma and my grandmamma Selby. One gives her hartshorn, another salts. "Lady G. Lady G. I must attend my dear Miss Byron: In an hour's time that will be her name no longer."

Lady G.] Here, here, child—Our Harriet's better, Lady L. and ashamed of herself. Sir Charles was sent for up, by her grandmother and aunt, to soothe her. Charming man! Tenderness and love are indeed tenderness and love in the brave and manly heart Emily will not be married, on any consideration. There is terror, and not joy, she says, in the attending circumstances. Good Emily, continue to harden thy heart against love, and thoughts of wedlock, for two years to come, and then change thy mind, for Beauchamp's sake!

"Dear Lucy, a line or two more. Your uncle; I hear his voice, fummoning—The man's mad; mad indeed, Lady L.—In fuch a hurry!"—Lucy, they are not yet all ready.

"Nor I, fays the raptured faucy-face, to take up the pen—not a line more can I, will I write, till the knot is tied."

Nor I, my dear Lady L. till I can give you joy upon it.

nute girl.

each

e by

on a

was ever,

ninghear,

She

dear

when a you

am in

Beau-

r and

Has

n are

! the

f the room ! We

arc

I fib: For this hurrying foul himself, in driving every body else, has forgot to be quite ready.

—But we are in very good time. Lucy has brought me up the order of procession, as Earlmarshal Selby has directed it.

Here I pin it on.

First

First Coach (Mr Selby's);

THE BRIDE, - Mr SELBY.
Mrs SHIRLEY, - - THE BRIDEGROOM.

Bride Men and Maids.

Second Coach (Mrs Shirley's).

Miss Emily Jervois, Lord Reresey.

Miss Nedham, - - Mr Beauchamp.

Third Coach (Sir Charles's).

Miss Barclay, - - Mr Falconbridge. Miss Watson, - - Mr Allestree.

Fourth Coach (Lord W.'s).

Mrs Selby, - - Lord W. Lady W. - - - Lord L.

Fifth Coach (old Mrs Selby's).

Old Mrs Selby, - Lord G. Lady G. - - Mr DEANE.

Sixth Coach (Mr Reeves's).

Mrs Reeves, - - Mr James Selby. Mis Lucy Selby, Mr Reeves.

Seventh Coach (Sir John Holles's).

Miss Nancy Selby, Mr Holles. Miss Kitty Holles, Mr Steele.

Eighth Coach (Lord G.'s).

Miss Patty Holles, Mr Godfrey. Miss Dolly Nedham, Mr Roberts.

Each.

in ad

Ea

ing

dir

que

as l at from

I prog No I fed. I fhe, do b Wha

Was

And me, grief

Each coach four horses. Sir Charles's state-coach to be reserved for the day of public appearance.

[From Selby-house to the church, half a mile, in coaches; foot-way not so much.]

Emily was very earnest to be bride-maid, tho' advised to the contrary.

Mr Beauchamp was a bride-man, at his own request also.

I will go back to the early part of the morning.

GE.

Each

We were each of us ferenaded, as I may fay, by direction of this joyful man uncle Selby (awakened, as he called it, to music), by James Selby, playing at each person's door an air or two, the words from an epithalamium (whose, I know not);

The day is come, you wish'd so long: Love pick'd it out amidst the throng: He destines to himself this sun, And takes the reins, and drives it on.

It is indeed a fine day. The fun feemed to reproach fome of us; but Harriet slept not a wink. No wonder.

I hastened up to falute her. She was ready dreffed. Charming readiness, my love, said I!

I took the opportunity while I was able, answered the.

Lucy, Nancy, were with her, both dressed, as she, for the day; that they might have nothing to do but to attend her. What joy in their faces! What sweet carefulness in the lovely Harriet's!—And will this day, said she once, in a low voice, to me, give me to the lord of my heart?—Let not grief come near it; joy can be enough painful!

Lucy.] My cousin, her spirits over-hurried, was ready to faint in her grandmother's arms; but, but, revived by the foothings, the bleffings, of her venerable parent, foon recovered. Let nobody be frighted, faid her grandmother: Affright not, by your hurryings, my lovely child! A little fatigued; her spirits are hurried: Her joy is too much for them.

What a charming presence of mind has Mrs Shirley! Lady G. bids me write any thing to your ladyship, so I will but write; and forbids me apologizing either for manner or words.

Sir Charles was admitted. She stood up the moment she saw him, love and reverence in her sweet aspect. With a kind impatience he hastened to her, and threw himself at her seet, taking her hand, and pressing it with his lips—Resume your magnanimity, my dearest life: By God's blessing, with the man before you, you will have more than a chance for happiness.

Forgive me, Sir, faid she, sitting down (She could hardly stand:) I can have no doubt of your goodness: But it is a great day! The solemnity is an awful one!

It is a great, a folemn day to me, my dearest creature! But encourage my joy by your smiles. It can suffer abatement only by giving you pain.

Generous goodness! But-

But what, my love? In compliment to the best of parents, to the kindest of uncles, resume your usual presence of mind. I, esse, who shall glory before a thousand witnesses in receiving the honour of your hand, shall be ready to regret that I acquiesced so chearfully with the wishes of those parental friends for a public celebration.

I have not been of late well, Sir: My mind is weakened. But it would be ungrateful, if I did not own to you, that my joy is as strong as my fear: It overcame me. I hope I shall behave better. You should not have been called to be a witness of my weakness-

This

thir tion bod chu

tha

fo.

the tha

upo

lov

you

cho

At I the part E

reac

der

grea

gran port tend twice

tring

aunt whif This day, my dearest love, we call upon the world to be a witness to our mutual vows. Let us shew that world, that our hearts are one; and that the ceremony, sacred as it is, cannot make them more so. The engagement is a holy one: Let us shew the multitude, as well as our surrounding friends, that we think it a laudable one. Once more I call upon you, my dearest life, to justify my joy by your apparent approbation. The world around you, loveliest of women, has been accustomed to see your lovers; shew them now the husband of your choice.

O Sir! you have given me a motive! I will think of it throughout the whole facred transaction. She looked around her, as if to see if everybody were ready that moment to attend her to church.

Lady G.] The ceremony is happily over; and I am retired to oblige my Caroline. You have the form of the procession. When every thing was ready, Mr Selby thought fit to call us down in order into the Great Hall, marshalling his fours; and great pride and pleasure did he take in his office. At his first summons, down came the angel, and the four young ladies, and each of the four had her partner assigned her.

Emily feemed, between the novelty and the parade, to be wholly engaged.

Harriet, the moment she came down, slew to her grandmamma, and kneeled to her, Sir Charles supporting her as she kneeled, and as she arose. A tender and fweet fight!

y

1-00 rs

ur

0-

he

er

to ner

our

ng,

an

She

our

y is rest

iles.

beft

your

bear of efced

ends

nd is d not

You f my

This

The old lady threw her arms about her, and twice or thrice kissed her forehead; her voice faltring—God bless, bless, sustain my child!—Her aunt kissing her cheek: Now, now, my dearest love, whispered she, I call upon you for fortitude.

She

She visibly struggled for resolution; but seemed, in all her motions, to be in a hurry, as if as aid she should not hold it. She passed me with such a sweet confusion! Charming girl! said I, taking her hand, as she passed, and giving way to her quick motions, for fear restraint should disconcert her.

When her uncle gave the word for moving, and approached to take her hand, she in her hurry, forgetting her cue, put it into Sir Charles's. Hold, hold, said her uncle, sweeping his bosom with his chin, in his arch way, that must not yet be. My brother, kissing her hand, presented it, in a very gallant manner, to her uncle. I yield it to you, Sir, said he, as a precious trust; in an hour's time to be confirmed mine by divine, as well as human fanctions.

Mr Selby led the lovely creature to the coach, but stopt at the door with her, for Mrs Shirley's going in first: The servants at a distance all admiring, and blessing, and praying, for their beloved young lady.

Sir Charles took the good Mrs Shirley's hand in one of his, and put the other arm round her waist, to support her. What honour you do me, Sir! said she. I think I may throw away this (meaning her ebony crutch-stick): Do I ail any thing? Her feet, however, seconded not her spirits. My brother listed her into the coach. It was so natural to him to be polite, that he offered his hand to his beloved Harriet; but was checked by her uncle (in his usual pleasant manner): Stay your time, too ready, Sir, said he. Thank God it will not be long before both hands will be yours.

We all followed, very exactly, the order that had been with fo much proud parade prescribed by Earl-marshal Selby.

The coach-way was lined with spectators. Mr Selby, it seems, bowed all the way, in return to the falutes of his acquaintance. Have you never, lady coa or hea fee not pain felf wer I to but are fort be f and ther fares

L.

gir am

kn

She fand if of it. many to this the far to know, what of The riet, w now or filled to yard, a

VoL

1 ...

L. called for the attention of your company in your coach, to fomething that has passed in the streets. or on the road, and at the fame time thrust your head through the window, fo that nobody could fee but yourself? So it was with Mr Selby, I doubt not. He wanted every one to look in at the happy pair; but took care that hardly any body but himfelf should be feen. I asked him afterwards, If it were not fo? He knew not, he faid, but it might. I told him, he had a very jolly comely face to flew. but no head. He does not spare me : But true jests are not always the most welcome. Tell a lady of forty, that she is fixty or seventy, and she will not be so angry as if she were guessed to be eight or nine and thirty. The one nobody will believe; the other every-body. My Lord G. I can tell you, fares well in Mr Selby's company.

"Lucy, my dear girl, take the pen—You don't know, you fay, what I wrote last—Read it, my girl—You have it—Take the pen; I want to be among them."

Lucy.] Lady G. must have her jest, whether in the right place, or not. Excuse me, both sisters. How could she, however, in a part so interesting? She says, I must give an account of the procession, and she will conduct them into the church; I out of it. I cannot, she says, after so many wishes, so many suspenses, so much expectation, before it came to this, be too minute. Every woman's heart leaps, she says, when a wedding is described; and wishes to know all, how and about it. Your ladyship will know, that these words are lady G.'s own: But what can I say of the procession?

The poor Harriet—Fie upon me—The rich Harriet, was not forry, I believe, that her uncle's head, now on this fide, now on the other, in a manner filled the coach: But when it stopt at the church-yard, an inclosed one, whose walls keep off coaches

Vol. VII. Y near

eley's l ad-

ed.

fhe

1 a

her

ick

and

for-old,

his

My

very

you,

time

man

md in waist,
Sir!
aning
Her broaral to his bele (in le, too
be long

at had

s. Mr n to the er, lady near a stone's throw from the church-porch, then was my lovely coufin put to it; especially as her grandmother walked fo flow. We were all out of our coaches before the father and the bride entered the porch. I should tell your ladyship, that the passage from the entrance of the church-yard to the church is railed in. Every Sunday the crowd (gathered to fee the gentry go in and come out) are accustomed to be bounded by these rails; and were the more contentedly fo now: The whole churchyard feemed one mass (but for that separating pasfage) of living matter, distinguished only by separate heads; not a hat on the men's; pulled off, perhaps, by general confent, for the convenience of feeing, more than from defigned regard in that par-But, in the main, never was there fuch filent respect shewn, on the like occasion, by mortal We all of us, Lady L. have the happiness to be beloved by high and low.

But one pretty spectacle it is impossible to pass Four girls, tenants' daughters, the eldest not above thirteen, appeared with neat wicker-baskets in their hands, filled with flowers of the feafon. Chearful way was made for them. As foon as the bride, and father, and Sir Charles, and Mrs Shirlev alighted, these pretty little Flora's, all dressed in white, chaplets of flowers for head dreffes, large nofegays in their bosoms, white ribbands adorning their stays and their baskets, some streaming down, others tied round the handles in true lover's knots. attended the company; two going before; the two others here and there, and every-where; all strewing flowers: A pretty thought of the tenants among themselves. Sir Charles seemed much pleated with them: Pretty dears he called them, to one of them.

God bless you, and God bless you, was echoed from many mouths. Your brother's attention was shiefly employed on Mrs Shirley, because of her age and rig th an on he ha pic G. the an W net mo tha in a iea

ar

ther ever be le won feen got was coul feate the I ther rails, took groo

fan!

and lamenefs. Here my good Lady G. perhaps would ftop to remark upon the worthy nature of the English populace, when good characters attract their admiration; for even the populace took notice, how right a thing it was for the finest young gentleman their eyes ever beheld to take fuch care of fo good an old lady. He deserved to live to be old himself, one faid: They would warrant, others faid, that he was a fweet-temper'd man; and others, that he had a good heart. In the procession one of us picked up one praise, another another. Tho' Lady G. Lady W. and the four bride-maids, as well as the lords, might have claimed high notice; yet not any of them received more than commendation: We were all confidered but as Satellices to the planets that passed before us. What indeed were we more? But let me fay, that Mrs Shirley had her thare in reverence, as the lovely couple had their's in admiration. But O how my dear coufin was affected, when the alighted from her uncle's coach!

The churchwardens themselves were so complaifant as to stand at the church-door, and opened it, on the approach of the bride, and her nuptial father. But all the pews near the altar were, however, filled (one or two excepted, which feemed to be left for the company) with ladies and well-dreffed women of the neighbourhood: And though they feemed to intend to thut the doors after we had all got in, the church was full of people. Mr Selby was displeased, for his niece's sake; who, trembling, could hardly walk up to the altar. Sir Charles feated his venerable charge on a covered bench on the left fide of the altar; and by her, and on another covered bench on the rightfide, without the rails, we all, but the bride maids and their partners, took our feats. They stood, the men on the bridegroom's fide; the maids on Harriet's-Never-

Y 2

Lady

choed n was er age and

n

er

of

ed

he

he

a-

re

ere

h-

af-

a-

er-

ee-

ar-

ich

rtal

s to pass

not

kets

fon.

the hir-

d in arge

ning

own,

nots,

two rew-

ts a-plea-

o one

Lady G.] 'Are you within the church, Lucy?— 'You are, I protest. Let me read what you have done. Come, pretty well, pretty well—You were going to praise my brother: Leave that to me.

"I have an excellent knack at it."

Never was man fo much and so deservedly admired. He saw his Harriet wanted support and encouragement. The minister stood suspended a few moments, as doubting whether she would not faint. My dearest love, whispered Sir Charles, remember you are doing honour to the happy, thrice happy man of your choice: Shew he is your choice, in the sace of this congregation. Pardon me, Sir, I will endeayour to be all you wish me.

Sir Charles bowed to the minister to begin the facred office. Mr Selby, with all his bravery, trembled, and, overcome by the folemnity of the preparation, looked now pale, now red. The whole congregation were hushed and filent, as if nobody were in the church but persons immediately concerned to be there. Emily changed colour frequently. She had her handkerchief in her hand, and (pretty enough!) her fifter bride-maids, little thinking that Emily had a reason for her emotion, which none of them had, pulled out their handkerchiefs too, and permitted a gentle tear or two to steal down their glowing cheeks. I fixed my eye on Emily, fitting outward, to keep her in order. The doctor began-" Dearly belived"-Ah, Harriet! thought I, thou art much quieter now than once thou wert at these words *.

No impediments were confessed by either of the parties when they were referred to by the minister, on this head. I suppose this reference would have been omitted by Sir Hargrave's snussling parson. To the question to my brother, "Wilt thou have,"

Sc.

&c.

not

I,]

had hea

offic

the girl

kne

the tanc

part reve mini

turn

Her

feem

which

hear

ed.

his 1

char

mini

She

their joined mini

marr

in n dy to obser

if the foul l

mode the a his fy

Sin

^{*} When Sir Hargrave Pollexfen would have com-

&c. he chearfully answered, I will. Harriet did not fay, I will not. " Who giveth this woman," &c. I, I, faid uncle Selby; and he owns, that he had much ado to refrain faying-" With all my heart and foul!" Sir Charles feemed to have the office by heart; Harriet in her heart: For before the minister could take the right-hand of the good girl to put it into that of my brother, his hand knew its office, nor did her trembling hand decline the favour. Then followed the words of acceptance, " I Charles take thee, Harriet," &c. on his part, which he audibly, and with apparent joy and reverence in his countenance, repeated after the minister : But not quite so alert was Harriet in her turn; her hand was rather taken than offered. Her lips, however, moved after the minister; nor feemed to hefitate at the little piddling word chey, which, I remember, gave a qualm to my poor heart on the like occasion. The ring was presented. The doctor gave it to Sir Charles, who, with his usual grace, put it on the finger of the most charming woman in England, repeating after the minister audibly, "With this ring I thee wed," &c. She brightened up; when the minister, joining their right hands, read, " Those whom God hath. joined together, let no man put afunder." And the minister's address to the company, declaring the marriage, and pronouncing them man and wife, in name of the Holy Trinity, and his bleffing them, swelled, she owns, her grateful heart, ready to burfting. In the responses, I could not but observe, that the congregation generally joined, as if they were interested in the celebration.

Sir Charles, with a joy that lighted up a more charming flush than usual on his face, his lively foul looking out at his fine eyes, yet with an air as modest as respectful, did credit to our sex before the applauding multitude, by bending his knee to his sweet bride, on taking her hand, and saluting come-

ve

ne.

ad-

ind l a

not re-

our don

the

ery,

the

The

s if ate-

our

her

iids,

re-

their

r or fixed er in

1"- ieter

the ilter,

have rion.

ave,"

&c.

her,

her, on the conclusion of the ceremony—May God, my dearest life, said he audibly, be gracious to your Grandison, as he will be good to his Harriet, now no more Byron!—She courtessed low, and with so modest a grace, that every soul blessed her, and pronounced her the loveliest of women, and him the most graceful and polite of men.

He invited Dr Curtis to the wedding-dinner, and led his bride into the veftry.

She was followed by her virgin-train; they by their partners.

She threw herself, the moment she beheld her grandmother, at her seet. Bless, madam, your happy, happy child.

God for ever bless the darling of my heart!

Sir Charles bent his knee to the venerable lady with fuch a condescending dignity, if I may so express myself, Receive and bless also your son, my Harriet's reverend parent, and mine.

The dear lady was affected. She slid off her feat on her knees, and with uplifted hands and eyes, tears trickling on her cheeks, Thou, Almighty, blefs the dear fon of my wishes!

He raised her with pious tenderness, and saluted her. Excellent lady!——He would have said more, but was affected—Every body was—And having seated the old lady, he turned to Mrs Selby——Words are poor, said he; my actions, my behaviour, shall speak the grateful sense I have of your goodness, saluting her; of yours, madam, to Mrs Shirley; and of yours, my dearest life, addressing himself to his lovely bride, who seemed hardly able to sustain her joy on so respectful a recognition of relation to persons so dear to her. Let me once more, added he, bless the hand that has blessed me!

She chearfully offered it: I give you, Sir, my Hand, faid she, and with it a poor Heart—A poor

ev

th

he

. .

.

. 1

. ;

it;

fies tra

dy,

dea

gra

dea

fup

be i

Sell

dan myi Mif

fun-

gree

Our unh

ther. foibl

both

T

poor Heart indeed! But it is a grateful one! It is all your own!

He bowed upon her hand. He spoke not. He feemed as if he could not speak.

Joy, Joy, Joy, was wished the happy pair, from every mouth. "See, my dear young ladies," faid the happy and instructing Mrs Shirley, addressing herself to them, "the reward of duty, virtue, and obedience! How unhappy must those parents and relations be, whose daughters, unlike our · Harriet, have difgraced themselves and their families, by a shameful choice—As my Harriet's is, fuch, looking around her be your lot, my amiable daughters!"

They every one befought her hand, and kiffed it; and fome by speech, all by looks and courtefies, promifed to cherish the memory of this happy transaction for their benefit.

Emily, when she approached the venerable lady, fobbing, faid, Bless me, me also bless, my dear grandmamma Shirley !- Let me be your own grand-daughter.-She embraced and bleffed the dear girl-Ah, my love, faid she, But will you fupply the place of my Harriet to me? Will you be my Harriet? Will you live with me and Mrs Selby-as Harriet did ?- Emily started: Ah, madam, you are all goodness! Let me try to make myfelf, in some little way, agreeable to my dear Miss Byron that was, and live a little while in the fun-shine of my guardian's eye; and then how proud shall I be to be thought, in any the least degree, like your Harriet!

This I thought a good hint of Mrs Shirley. Our Harriet (my dear Caroline) shall not be made unhappy by the chit; nor shall the dear girl neither, if I can help it, be made fo by her own foible. We will watch over both, for the good of both, and for the tranquillity of the best of men.

Beauchamp's

that -A

W. fed en,

ay

us

ir-

by ind

her our ady exmy

her and Al-

falufaid And Sel-, my ve of m, to , ademed a re-r, my Poor

her.

Beauchamp's joy shone through a cloud, because of his father's illness; but it did shine.

Mr Selby and my lord were vastly alive. Lord L. was fervent in his joy and congratulations; but he was wifer than both put together. Nothing was wanting to shew that he was excessively pleafed; but I was afraid the other two would not have considered the vestry as part of the church; and would have struck up a tune without music.

How fincerely joyful, also, were Lord and Lady W.! My lord's eyes burst into tears more than once: Nephew, and dear nephew at every word, whether speaking of or to my brother, as if he thought the relation he stood in to him a greater glory than his peerage, or ought else that he valued himself upon, his excellent lady excepted.

Upon my honour, Caroline, I think, as I have often faid, that people may be very happy, if not most happy, who set out with a moderate stock of love, and supply what they want in that with prudence. I really think, that my brother and Harriet cannot be happier than are now this worthy couple; times of life confidered on both fides, and my lord's inferior capacity allowed for. For certainly, men of fense are most capable of joyful fensations, and have their balances; since it is as certain, that they are also most susceptible of pain-What then, is the stuff, the nonfense, that romantic girls, their romancing part of life not wholly elapsed, prate about, and din one's ears with, of first love, first flame, but first folly? Do not most of fuch give indication of gun-powder constitutions, that want but the match to be applied to fet them into a blaze? Souls of tinder, discretions of flimfy gauze, that conceal not their folly—One day they think as I do; and perhaps before they have daughters who will convince them of the truth of my affertion.

But

6]

ti

ti

faid

for general feethon and hope requirements for the feethon and hope req

O mine glory

my o

well.

the b The folem difon nephony d of ev lane

But here comes Lucy.—" My dear girl take the pen—I am too fentimental. The French on' ly are proud of fentiments at this day; the English cannot bear them: Story, story, story, is what they hunt after, whether fense or non-

' fense, probable or improbable."

Se!

d ut

gr

a-ot

1;

a-

an rd,

he ter

lu-

ave

not

of ru-

ar-

thy

and cer-

yful s as

ain-

nfe,

life

ne's

olly?

ow-

o be tin-

not per-

vince

But

Lucy.] "Bless me, Lady G.! you have written a great deal in a little time. What am I to do?"

Lady G.] "You brought the happy pair into the church. I have told Lady L. what was done there: You are to carry them out."

Lucy.] "And fo I will."—My dearest love, faid her charming man to my cousin, who had a little panic on the thoughts of going back through fo great a croud, imagine, as you walk, that you fee nobody but the happy man whom you have honoured with your hand: Every body will praise and admire the loveliest of women. Nobody, I hope, will blame your choice. Remember at whose request it was, that you are put upon this difficulty: Your grandmamma's and uncle's. She, one of the best of women, was married to one of the best of men. I was but acquiescent in it. Shew, my dearest life, all your numerous admirers and well-wishers, that you are not ashamed of your choice.

O Sir! how charmingly do you strengthen my mind! I will shew the world that my choice is my glory.

Every body being ready, she gave her hand to the beloved of her heart.

The bells were fet a-ringing the moment the folemnity was concluded; and Sir Charles Grandison, the son of our venerable Mrs Shirley, the nephew of my uncle and aunt Selby, husband of my dear and ever dear Harriet, and the esteemed of every heart, led his graceful bride through a lane of applauding and decent behaving spectators,

tors, down through the church—and still more thronging multitudes in the church-yard; the four little Flora's again strewing flowers at their feet, as they passed. My sweet girls, said he, to two of them, I charge you, complete the honour you have done us, by your presence at Selby-house: You will bring your companions with you, my loves.

My uncle looked around him as he led Mrs Shirley: So proud! and so stately? By some undesigned change, Mr Beauchamp led Miss Jervois. She seemed pleased, and happy; for he whispered to her all the way praises of her guardian. My guardian, twice or thrice, occasionally, repeated the aloud, as if she boasted of standing in some relation to him.

The bride and bridegroom stopt for Mrs Shirley a little while at the coach-side: A very grateful accident to the spectators: He led them both in, with a politeness that attends him in all he does. The coach wheeled off, to give way to the next; and we came back in the order we went.

"Now, my dear Lady G. you, who never were from the fide of your dear new fifter for " the rest of the day, resume the pen."

Lady G.] "I will, my dear; but in a new letter. This fourth sheet is written down to the very edge. Caroline will be impatient: I will fend away this."

Joy to my fifter! Joy to my aunt! Joy to the earl! To Lady Gertrude! To our dear Dr Bartlett! To every one, on an event so happy; and so long wished for by us all!

" Sign, Lucy, fign."

Cal Sin hak

There then, CHARLOTTE G.

And, There then, LUCY SELBY.

LETTER

the he certa little and y reline fmilin strang be midea, fon.

from bleffin by hu

Wh

Then
Then
every joy; j one wa
light of ranks, worthy
And M dies joi
the like would felf. I

even to attaine

LETTER XXXV.

Lady G. To Lady L. In Continuation.

THIS happy event has been so long wished for by us all; we are so much delighted with the bride, as well as the bridegroom; so many uncertainties, so many suspenses, have fallen in; so little likelihood once that it ever would have been; and you are so miserably tied by the leg, poor Caroline! and so little to divert you, besides the once smiling to the ten times squalling of your little stranger; that compassion, love, both incite me to be minute; that so you may be as much with us in idea, as we all wished you could have been in person.

Crouds of people lined the way, in our return from church, as well as in our way to it; and bleffings were pronounced upon the happy pair, by hundreds, at their alighting at Selby-house.

When we were all affembled in the great hall, mutual congratulation flowed from every mouth: Then did every man falute the happy bride: Then did the equally happy bridegroom falute every lady-There was among us the height of joy; joy becoming the awful folemnity; and every one was full of the decent behaviour, and the delight expressed by the crouds of spectators of all ranks, and both fexes; a delight and decency worthy of the characters of the admirable pair: And Miss Nedham declared, and all the young ladies joined with her, that if the could be fecure of the like good behaviour and encouragement, she would never think of a private wedding for herfelf. Mr Selby himfelf was overjoyed, too much even to utter a jest; Now, now, he said, he hat attained the height of his ambition.

The

TTE G.

re

et,

of ave

Cou

Virs

un-

ois.

ered

My

ated

e re-

Shir-

rate-

both ll he

y to r we never er for new

to the

I will

to the

Bartand fo

LBY.

T E R

The dear Harriet could look up: She could fmile around her. I led her, with Lucy, into the cedarparlour-Now, my dear love, faid I, the moment we entered it, throwing my arms about her, just as her lips were joyfully opening to fpeak to me, do I falute my real fifter, my fifter Grandison, in my dear Lady L.'s name, as well as in my own: God Almighty confirm and establish your happinefs!

My dearest, dearest Lady G. how grateful, how encouraging, to my heart, is your kind falutation! Your continued love, and that of my dear Lady L. will be effential to my happiness.

May our hearts be ever united! replied I. they must: For were not our minds kindred minds before?

But you must love my Lucy, faid she, presenting her to me-You must love my grand-mamma, faid I, catching the word from her, your aunt, your uncle, your cousins, and your cousins' cousins, to the twentieth generation-And fo I will: Ours yours; yours ours! We are all of one family, and will be for ever.

What a happy creature am I! replied she-How many people can one good man make fo!-But where is my Emily, sweet girl! Bring to me, gate, as Lucy, bring to me my Emily!

Lucy went out, and led in the dear girl. With pany, are hands and eyes uplifted, My dear Miss Byron, that was, now Lady Grandison, said she, love me; love your Emily. I am now your Emily, your He to ward; love me as well as you did when Miss Harriet Byron.

Harriet threw her arms about her neck; I do, h his lo I will, I must: You shall be my fister, my friend; vithdraw my Emily now, indeed! Love me, as I will sy dear love you; and you shall find your happiness in fee th

mine

har On the with ed e her digu H dear, love ward powe at fir

0 8 ness! throug If the fitness Was champ But ter you of a fa their b your uf hem into elby; a

VOL. Y

Sir Charles entered; his Beauchamp in his hand. Quitting his and taking hers, he kiffed it. Once more, faid he, do I thank my dearest life for the honour she has done me: Then resuming, with his other hand, his Beauchamp's, he prefented each to the other, as brother and fifter.

Beauchamp, in a graceful manner, bowed on her hand: She courtefied to him with an air of dignity and esteem.

He then turning to Emily, Acknowledge, my dear, faid he, your eldest fister: My Harriet will love her Emily. Receive, my dearest life, your ward. Yet (to Emily) I acquit not myfelf of the power, any more than of the will, of obliging you at first hand.

O Sir! faid the fobbing girl, you are all goodness! But I will make no request to you, but through my dearest Lady Grandison's mediation. If the approve of it first, I shall not doubt of its fitness to be complied with.

Was not that pretty in Emily? O how Beauchamp's eyes loved her!

But why, ladies, faid Sir Charles, do you fequefter yourselves from the company? Are we not all he of a family to-day? The four little Flora's, with to me, gate, as I came in: Receive them, my love, with your usual graciousness. We will join the com-With pany, and call them in. My Beauchamp, you are on, that a brideman; restore my bride to her friends and we me; dmirers within.

He took Emily's hand. She looked so proud!— ten Miss Harriet gave hers to Beauchamp. We followed them into the great hall: Mr Selby had archness is; I do, in his look, and seemed ready to blame us for friend; withdrawing Sir Charles was aware of him. friend; rithdrawing. - Sir Charles was aware of him. s I will sy dear Mr Selby, said he, will you not allow us minels in fee the pretty Flora's? By all means, faid Mr elby; and hurried out, and introduced them.

Sir Vol. VII. Z Sweet do my wn: ppihow .

luta-

dear

nile

ar-

ent t as

But minds

enting mma, aunt, oufins, will: fami-

Sweet pretty girls! We had more leifure to confider the elegant rufficity of their dreffes and appearance. They had their backets in their hands, and a courtefy and blush ready for every one in Sir Charles feemed to expect that his bride would take notice of them first; but observing that she wanted presence of mind, he stept to them; took each by the hand, the youngest first; called them pretty loves; I with, faid he, I could present you with as pretty flowers as you threw away in honour to this company; putting into each basket, wrapped up in paper, five guineas: Then presented them, two in each hand, to his bride; who, by that time, was better prepared to receive them with that fweet eafe and familiarity which give grace to all the fays and does.

The children afterwards defiring to go to their parents, the polite Beauchamp himself, accompanied by Lucy, led them to them, and returned, with a request from all the tenants, that they might have the honour, some time in the day, to see the bride and bridegroom among them, were it but for two minutes. What says my love? said Sir Charles. O, Sir, I cannot, cannot—Well, then, I will attend them, to make your excuse, as well as I can. She bowed her thanks.

The time before dinner was devoted to converfation. Sir Charles was nobody's, no, not very particularly his bride's: He put every one upon speaking in turn. For about half an hour he sat between the joyful Mrs Shirley and Mrs Selby; but even then, in talking to them, talked to the whole company: Yet, in his air and manner to both, shewed so much respect, as needed not the aid of a particular address to them in words.

This was observed to me by good Lord L. For Harriet (uneasy, every eye continually upon her, thoughtful, bashful) withdrawing, a little be fore dinner, with a cast of her eye to me, I follow mu lan pio did volverit tatio of 1 once men and when

ed

But marrit) h comp

It

ed a an ai napki arm, dear ought boch

Ad fure canno must a me, m

Sir waited arm: felf to each, i round to and nds, e in this fervpt to first; could ew aeach Then oride; eccive

o their ompad, with might fee the but for id Sir then, I well as

which convernot very ne upon

r he fat
r Selby;
I to the anner to not the
ds.

Lord Lally upon little be I follow ed her to her dreffing-room. There, with fo much expressiveness of meaning, though not of language; so much tenderness of love; so much pious gratitude; so much true virgin sensibility; did she open her heart to me, that I shall ever revolve what passed in that conversation, as the true criterion of virgin delicacy unmingled with affectation. Nor was I displeased, that in the height of her grateful self-congratulation, she more than once acknowledged a sigh for the admirable Clementina. We just began to express our pleasure and our hopes in the good behaviour of our Emily, when we were called to dinner.

It was a fumptuous one.

Mr Selby was very orderly, upon the whole: But he remembered, he faid, that when he was married (and he called upon his dame to confirm it) he was obliged to wait on his bride, and the company; and he infifted upon it, that Sir Charles thould.

No, no, no, every one faid; and the bride looked a little ferious upon it: But Sir Charles, with an air of gaiety that infinitely became him, took a napkin from the butler; and, putting it under his arm, I have only one request to make you, my dear Mr Selby—When I am more aukward than I ought to be, do you correct me; and I shall have both pride and pleasure in the task.

Adad! faid Mr Selby, looking at him with pleafure—You may be any thing, do any thing; you cannot conceal the gentleman. Ads-heart, you must always be the first man in company—Pardon me, my lords.

Sir Charles was the modestest servitor that ever waited at table, while his napkin was under his arm: But he laid it down while he addressed himfelf to the company, finding something to say to each, in his pithy, agreeable manner, as he went round the table. He made every one happy.

Z 2

With

With what delight did the elder ladies look upon him, when he addressed himself to each of them! He stopt at the bride's chair, and made her a compliment with an air of tenderness. I heard not what it was, sitting at a distance; but she looked grateful, pleased; smiled, and blushed. He passed from her to the bride-maids, and again complimented each of them. They also seemed delighted with what he said. Then going to Mr Selby, Why don't you bid me resume the napkin, Sir?—No, no; we see what you can do: Your conformity is enough for me. You may now sit down when you please. You make the waiters look aukward.

He took his feat, thanked Mr Selby for having reminded him of his duty, as he called it, and was all himself, the most graceful and obliging of men.

You know, my dear Lady L. how much I love to praise my brother. Neither I, nor the young ladies, not even those who had humble servants present, regarded any body but him. My poor lord!— I am glad, however, that he has a tolerable good set of teeth—they were always visible. A good honest fort of man though, Lady L. whatever you may think of him.

After dinner, at Mr Selby's reminding motion, Sir Charles and the men went to the tenants. They all wished him joy; and, as they would not fit down while he stood, Sir Charles took a feat among them, and all the rest followed his example.

One of the honest men, it seems, remembered the nuptials of Mr and Mrs Byron, and praised them as the best and happiest of the human race: Others confirmed bis character of both: Another knew the late Mr Shirley, and extolled him as much: Another remembered the birth, another the christening, of the bride; and others talked of what you you by cou diffe On tak to we diffe wl

Le

in he, than

of th

elect The faid, body would decla Char over was r while He behav their I fabilit day of

was o pon em! om- oked affed affed men- with Why -No, ty is when wing was g of

auk-

love oung vants poor tolerifible. dy L. otion, nants. Id not a feat is expraifed race: nother him as nother lked of what what an excellent creature she was from infancy. Let me tell you, Sir, said one grey-headed man, you will have much ado to deserve her; and yet you are said to be as good as you are handsome. The women took up the cause: They were sure, by what they had heard, if any man in the world could deserve the bride, it was Sir Charles Grandison; and they would swear for him by his looks. One of the honest men said, they should all have taken it as a bugeous savour, were they allowed to wish the bride joy, though at ever so great a distance.

Sir Charles faid, he was fure the women would excuse her this day; and then the men would, in complaisance to them. We will hope, said he, looking all round him, before we leave Northamptonshire, for one happy dinner together.

They all got up to bow and courtefy, and looked upon each other; and the men, who are most of them freeholders, wished to the lord for a new election, and that he would come among them. They had no great matter of fault to find, they said, with their present representatives; but any body who would oppose Sir Charles Grandison would stand no chance. The women joined in the declaration, as if they thought highly, as Sir Charles pleasantly observed, of their own influence over their husbands. They all wondered that he was not in parliament, till they heard how little a while he had been in England.

He took leave of the good people (who, by their behaviour and appearance, did as much credit to their landlords as to themselves) with his usual affability and politeness; repeating his promise of a day of jubilee, as some of them called it.

The ball, at the request of the whole company, was opened by the bride and bridegroom. She was very uneasy at the general call. Sir Charles saw she was, and would have taken out Miss Ned-ham; but it was not permitted. The dear creature, I believe, did her best at the time; but I have seen her perform better: Yet she did exceedingly well. But such a figure herself, and such a partner! how could she do amis?

Emily was taken out by Beauchamp. He did his best, I am sure; and almost as much excelled his pretty partner, as his beloved friend did

his.

Emily, fitting down by me, asked if she did not perform very ill. Not very ill, my dear, said I; but not so well as I have seen you dance. I don't know, said she, what ails me: My heart is very heavy, madam. What can be the meaning of it? But don't tell Lady Grandison so.—High-ho!—Lady Grandison! What a sound is that? A charming sound! But how shall I bring my lips to be familiarized to it?

You are glad she is married, my love, I dare fay?

Glad! To be fure I am! It is an event that I have long, long wished for: But new names, and new titles, one knows not how to frame one's mouth to presently. It was some time before I could call you Lady G. But don't you pity poor Lady Clementina a little, madam?

A great deal, I do. But as she refused my brother-

Ah! dear! that's the thing! I wonder she could—when he would have let her have the free exercise of her religion.

Had you rather your guardian had had Lady Clementina, Emily?

O no! How can you ask me such a question, madam? Of all the women in the world, I wished him to have Miss Byron. But she is too happy for pity, you know, madam!——Bless me! What does she look so thoughtful for? Why does she sigh so? Surely she cannot be forry!

Sorry!

ti

li

P

is

in

ly

th

CO

tir

fhe

go

na

Di

ne

go

my thi

ona

bou

me:

all of

mai

ever

him

bett

that plau

with

She

it.

N

Sorry! No, my love! But a change of condition for life! New attachments! A new course of life! Her name funk and loft! The property. person and will, of another, excellent as the man is; obliged to go to a new house; to be ingrafted into a new family; to leave her own, who so dearly love her; an irrevocable destiny !- Do you think, Emily, new in her present circumstances, every eye upon her, it is not enough to make a confiderate mind, as hers is, thoughtful?

All these are mighty hardships, madam! putting up her lip-But, Lady G., can you suppose the thinks them fo? If the does - But the is a dear good lady !- I shall ever love her. She is an ornament of our fex! See, how lovely the looks ! Did your ladyship ever see so sweet a creature? I never did.

Not for beauty, dignity, ease, figure, modesty, good fense, did I ever!

She is my guardianess, may I fay? Is there fuch a word?-I shall be as proud of her, as I am of my guardian. Yet there is no cause of fighing, I think .- See my guardian! her husband! Unfashionable as the word is, it is a pretty word. bouse-band, that ties all together. Is not that the meaning?-Look round! How does he furpass all men !- His eafe, talk of eafe! His dignity, talk of dignity! As handsome a man as she is a woman! See how every young lady eyes him; every young gentleman endeavours to imitate him. I wish he would take me out; I would do better.

This was the fubstance of the whispering dialogue that passed between Emily and me-Poor girl!

Mr Selby danced with Lucy, and got great applause. He was resolved, he said, to have one dance with the bride. She befought him not to think of it. Her grandmamma, her aunt, entreated for her. She defired Sir Charles to interpose-If, my dearest restion, wished

ea-

it I

ed-

ha

did

ex-

did

not

II:

on't

very

it?

-!0

lips

dare

hat I

, and one's fore I

poor

y bro-

er fhe

ne free

Lady

ppy for What oes she

Sorry!

life, you could oblige your uncle-I cannot, cannot think of it, faid fhe.

Lady G. faid Sir Charles, be fo good as to challenge Mr Selby. I stood forth and offered my hand to him. He could not refuse it. He did not perform fo well as he did with Lucy. Go, faid I, when we had done, fit down by your dame, and be quiet: You have loft all your credit. You dance with a bride !- Some people know not how to bear applause; nor to leave off when they are well. Lord L. took out Mrs Selby. She dances very gracefully. Your Lord, you know, is above praise. The young Lord Reresby and Miss Nedham diflinguished themselves. My odd creature was in his element. He and Miss Barclay, and another time he and Emily, did very handsomely, and the girl got up her reputation Lord W. did hobble, and not ungracefully, with old Mrs Selby; who had not danced, she faid, for twenty years before; but, on so joyful an occasion, would not refuse Lord W.'s challenge: And both were applauded; the time of life of the lady, the limpingness of my lord, confidered.

There was a very plentiful fideboard of rich wines, fweetmeats, &c.

We all disclaimed formal supper.

We went afterwards into country dances.

Mrs Shirley retired about ten. Harriet took the opportunity of attending her. I had an intimation to follow.

I found her just dropt on her knees to her grandmamma, who, with her arms about her neck, was folding to her fond heart the darling of it.

I was called upon to give my opinion, whether fhe should return to the company, or not: I gave it, that she should; and that she should retire, for the night, about eleven. As to the bridemaids, I said, I would manage, that they should only attend her to her chamber, and leave her there, with her the wordar on heif if v

N

mucher I

her bric

and

wit wai turi

fell fhe i wou

very wer

S

hen lovi faid one

brot

aunt, Lucy, and me. Lord L. undertook to make the gentlemen give up form; which, he faid, they would the more easily do, as they were set into dancing.

After all, Lady L. we women dressed out in ribbands, and gaudy trappings, and in virgin-white, on our wedding-days, seem but like milk-white heisers led to facrifice. We ought to be indulged if we are not shameless things, and very wrong indeed, in our choice of the man we can love.

Mr Selby broke from his partner, Miss Barclay, to whisk into the figure of the bride.

Sir Charles joined the deferted lady, who feemed much better pleased with her new partner than with her old one.

Lord W. who was fitting down, took Mrs Selby, and led her into the dance.

I drew Miss Nedham to the sideboard, and gave her her cue: She gave theirs to the three other bridemaids.

About eleven, Mrs Selby, unobserved, withdrew with the bride. The bride-maids, one by one, waited on her to her chamber; faluted her, and returned to company.

The dear creature wanted presence of mind. She fell into my reslection above. O my dear Lady G.! she said, was I not right when I declared, that I never would marry, were it not to the man I loved above all the men in the world?

She complimented me twenty times with being very good. She prayed for me; but her prayers were meant for herfelf.

You remember, that she told me on my apprehensiveness on the like occasion, that fear made me loving to her. On her blessing me, Ah, Harriet, said I, you now find, that apprehension will make one pious, as well as loving.

My fifter, my friend, my own, my Caroline's, my brother's, dear Lady Grandison! said I, when I left her, near undressed, God bless you! And God be praised, that I can call you by these tender names! my brother is the happiest of men; you of women. May we never love each other less than we do now. Look forward to the ferene happiness of your future lot. If you are the tjoy of our brother, you must be our joy, and the jewel of our family.

She answered me only by a fervent embrace, her eyes lifted up, furcharged, as I may fay, with tears of joy, as in thankfulness.

I then rushed down stairs, and into the com-

My brother instantly addressed me-My Harriet, whispered he, with impatience, returns not this night.

You will fee Mrs Selby, I prefume, by-and-by, returned I.

He took his feat by old Mrs Selby, and fell into talk with her, to avoid joining in the dances. His eye was continually turned to the door. Mrs Selby at last came in. Her eyes shewed the tender leave fhe had taken of her Harriet.

My brother approached her. She went out: He followed her.

In a quarter of an hour she returned. We faw my brother no more that night.

We continued our dancings till between three and four.

I have often observed, that we women, whether weakly or robust, are hardly ever tired with dancing. It was fo with us. The men, poor fouls! looked filly and fleepy by two, all but my ape: He has a good many femalities, as uncle Selby calls them. But he was brought up to be idle and useless, as women generally are.

I must conclude my letters whimsically, my dear: If I did not, you would not know them to be writ-Your CHARLOTTE G. ten by

LETTER

told

He he,

the of o

and ther

to p

Por

T

I all l

I

arde

Cler

Her

Hol

class

face

mur

ter

ever

difo

peat

ness

ver,

be w

IV.

O

T

LETTER XXXVI.

Lady G. In Continuation.

MILY, Lucy, and I, went to pay our morning-congratulations as foon as we arose, which was not very early, to my brother, being told that he was in the cedar parlour writing. He received us like himself. I am writing, said he, a few very short letters. They are to demand the felicitations, one of our beloved Caroline, one of our aunt Grandison, one of the Earl of G. and one of our dear Dr Bartlett. There is another; you may read it, Charlotte.

That also was a thort one; to fignify, according to promise, as I found, to Signor Jeronymo della Porretta, the actual celebration of his nuptials.

I returned it to him-" Like my brother," was all I faid.

It concluded with a caution given in the most ardent terms, against precipitating the admirable Clementina.

We went up to the bride. She was dreffing. Her aunt was with her, and her two cousins Holles, who went not home the preceding night.

The moment we entered the ran to us, and, clasping her arms about my neck, hid her bluthing face in my bosom—My dearest, dearest Lady G. murmured she—Am I indeed your sister, your sister Grandsson? And will you love me as well as ever?

My dearest, lovely fister! my own fister Grandison! My brother's wife! Most sincerely do I repeat, Joy, Joy, Joy to my Harriet!

O Lady G.! How you raise me! Your goodness is a seasonable goodness to me! I never, never, but by yours, and your fister's example, shall be worthy of your brother!

Then

Then embracing Emily, Wish me joy, my love!

In my joy shall you find your own!

Emily wept, and even fobbed—You must, you must treat me less kindly, madam. I cannot, cannot bear your good—your goodness. On my knees I acknowledge my other guardian. God bless my dear, dear Lady Grandison!

At that moment, as they were folded in each other's arms, entered my brother—He clasped his round his sweet bride: Pardon this intrusion, said he—Excellent creature, continue to love my Emily!—Continue, my Emily, to deserve the sisterly love of my Harriet!

Then turning to me, faluting me, My Charlotte loves my Harriet; so does our Caroline. She fondly loves you both. God continue your love to each other! What a sister has yesterday's happy event given to each other!—What a wife to me!—We will endeavour, my love (to her), to deserve our happiness; and, I humbly trust, it will be continued to us.

He faluted Mrs Selby—My own aunt Selby! What obligations am I under to you, and to our venerable Mrs Shirley, for giving to an angel an angel's education, and conferring on me the blef-fing!

Congratulate me, my dear coufins Holles, faluting each. May you both be as happy, whenever you alter your fingle estate, as I will endeayour to make your lovely cousin!

He withdrew, bowing to us; and with fo much respectfulness to the happy Harriet, as delighted us all.

Lucy went down with him, to pay her morning-compliments to the two grandmammas.

Sister, said Kitty Holles, after he was gone we never, never can think of marrying, after we have seen Sir Charles Grandison, and his behaviour.

Lucy

Luc their o mamn you in gentle great threw bleffing manne of fon left me good n But, m good n motive every f tions, Harrie though it is my this ma not, my ferve w tion to My dea You ma

your gl We a riet, as difficult were all for thei having
At laft
Lucy.

turning me tel fomethir led her

Vol.

Lucy came up with Nancy. They embraced their coufin. Your grandmamma and my grandmamma, my dearest cousin, are impatient to fee you in your grandmamma's chamber; and the gentlemen are crying out for their breakfasts in the great parlour. We hurried down. The bride threw herfelf at her grandmamma's feet for her bleffing. It was given in fuch a tender and pious manner, that we were all affected by it. The best of fons, of men, faid the afterwards, has but just left me. What a bleffing to all around him is a good man! Sir Charles Grandison is every thing. But, my dear loves, (to the younger ladies,) Let a good man, let life, let manners, be the principal motive of your choice: In goodness will you have every fanction; and your fathers, mothers, relations, friends, every joy! My dearest love, my Harriet, taking her hand, there was a time that I thought no man on earth could deferve you: Now it is my prayer, and will be, that you may deferve this man. But let us join the gentlemen. Fear not, my Harriet-Sir Charles's character will preferve with every one its dignity, and give a fanction to the folemnity that has united you to him. My dearest love! be proud, and look assured: You may, or who can? Yesterday's transaction is your glory; glory in it, my Harriet!

We attended the two elder ladies down. Harriet, as bashful people ever do, increased her own difficulties, by staying behind with her Lucy. We were all seated at the breakfast-tables, and staid for them: Mr Selby grew impatient, every one having declared themselves ready for breakfast. At last down came the blushing bride, with her Lucy. Sir Charles seeing Mr Selby's countenance turning peevishly arch, just as he had begun, "Let me tell you, niece," and was coming out with something, he arose, and taking his bride's hand, led her to her seat. Hush, my dear Mr Selby, Vol. VII.

faid he: Nobody must call to account my wife, and I present.—How, Sir! How, Sir! Already have

I lost my niece?

Not fo, Mr Selby. All her duties will have firength given them by the happy event of yesterday: But you must not let a new-married man see how much easier it is to find fault than to be faultless.

Your fervant, Sir! replied Mr Selby—You'll one day pay for your complaifance, or my niece is not a woman. But I was ready primed. You have robbed me of a jest; and that, let me tell you, would have been more to me than my breakfast.

After breakfast, Lucy gave us a lesson on the harpsichord. Sir Charles accompanied her finger, at the defire of the company.

Lord and Lady W. excused themselves to breaktast, but came to dinner. We entertained one another with reports of what paffed yesterday, what people faid, how the tenants' feast was managed, how the populace behaved at the houses which were kept open. The churchwardens' lift was produced of the poor recommended by them: It amounted to upwards of 140, divided it into two classes; one of the acknowledged poor, the other of poor housekeepers and labouring people who were ashamed to apply, but to whom the church wardens knew bounty would be acceptable. There were above thirty of these to whom Sir Charles gave very handsomely, but we knew not what. The churchwardens, who are known to be good men, went away bleffing him, with hearts running over at their lips, as if they themselves were to find their account in his goodness.

Saturday.

WE have had a smart debate this morning, on the natural independency of our sex, and the usurpation of the other. Particulars by and by.

My he has againf own c They ! require W. are fome g ving h your c in my at him are in The ea were fo go. I Yet all pearan manengage chin's gair! would fulfom to the riage: fwer fo he is fi behavi even w fometimes Si is atterwith for the second with seco ty to

or the id ve

ve

ran

be 11 13

ou

ell

k-

he

er,

k-

a-

at

ed,

ch

ro-

a-

wo

ho

ch

ere rles

at.

boo

ing

to:

on fur-

My

1.

My brother is an irrefistible man. To-morrow he has carried it to make his appearance at church, against all their first intentions, and that by their He had confidered every thing: own confents. They had not. Mr Beauchamp has letters which require him to go up to town: Lord and Lady W. are defirous to get thither, his lordship having fome gouty warnings: I am obliged to go up, having hated to fet about any thing preparatory to your case, Caroline! [If the wretch were to come in my way just now, I should throw my standish at him, I believe.] The Earl and Lady Gertrude are in town, and I am afraid of another reprimand. The earl never jests but he means the same as if he I shall take Emily with me when I were ferious. Mrs Reeves wants to be with her little boy. Yet all these people are desirous to credit the appearance. I had like to have forgot your good man-He longs to fee his Caroline, and hopes to engage my brother to stand in person as his urchin's sponsor. So you see that there is a necessity to confent to make the appearance to-morrow, or the bride will lofe the flower of her company.

God continue the happiness of this charming pair! Their behaviour to each other is just what I would wish it to be, tender, affectionate, without fulfome fondness. He cannot be more respectful to the dear creature now, than he was before marriage: But, from his prefent behaviour, I dare anfwer for him, that he will not be less so: And yet he is fo lively, that he has all the young man in his behaviour, whenever occasions call for relaxation; even when subjects require seriousness, as they do iometimes, in conversations between Mrs Shirley, Mrs Selby, Mr Deane and him, his feriousness, as Mrs Shirley herself finely observed in his absence, is attended with fuch vivacity, and intermingled with fuch entertaining illustrations, all naturally Aa 2 ariling arifing from, and falling into the subject, that he is sure of every one's attention and admiration.

The features of his manly face, and the turn of his fine eye, observed the, on another occasion, are cast for pity, and not for censure. And let me add a speech of his, when he was called up to censure a person on a slight representation of facts:

"The whole matter is not before us, faid he: We know not what motives he may have to plead by way of extenuation, though he may not be able entirely to excuse himself. But, as it ap' pears to me, I would not have done fo."

But what, my dear, am I about? Are they not my brother's praises that I am expatiating upon? Was I ever to be trusted with that subject? Is there no man, I have been asked, that is like your brother?—He, I have answered, is most likely to resemble him, who has an unbounded charity, and universal benevolence to men of all professions, and who, imitating the divinity, regards the heart rather than the head, and much more than either rank or fortune, though it were princely, and yet is not a leveller, but thinks that rank or degree intitles a man, who is not utterly unworthy of both, to respect.

I will write one more letter, and then give way to other affairs.

I never thought I should have been such a scribbler. But the correspondence between my brother and Dr Bartlett, into which we were all so eager to peep; that of this dear creature with her Lucy, which so much entertained us, and which led us, in her absence, to wish to continue the series of it; the story of Clementina so interesting; all our sufpences so affecting, and the state of this our lovely friend's heart so peculiar, and the desire of amusing you in your confinement: All these together led me on. But now one letter more shall conciude my task.

Lord

his w little fough do m pleafu creatu to rer way t deligi

I he fa

To prior W. h Grand Yo to a ry.

fuper dream O

much permitentic dies, In the fuper morn

I we this completter

Lord L. has just now mentioned to his brother his wishes that he would stand godfather to the little lord. My brother caught his hand, and befought his pardon for not offering himself. You do me, my dear lord, said he, both honour and pleasure. Where was my thought? But this dear creature, turning to his bride, will be so good as to remind me of all my imperfections. I am in a way to mend; for the duties inseparable from my delightful new engagement will strengthen all my other duties.

I have taken upon me, Sir, faid she, to request the favour of my Lord and Lady L.'s acceptance of me for a godmother.

To which I have objections, faid I. I have a prior claim. Aunt Eleanor has put in hers, Lady W. hers; and this before Miss Byron was Lady Grandison.

Your circumstance, my dear Lady G. according to a general observation of our fex, is prohibitory.

t

y

)-

r

r

7.

;

ſ-

1-er n-

d

Will you, my brother, appealed I, allow of fuperstitious observances, prognostics, omens, dreams?

O no! My Harriet has been telling me how much fhe fuffered lately from a dream, which she permitted to give strength and terror to her apprehensions from Mr Greville. Guard, my dear ladies, against these imbecilities of tender minds. In these instances, if in no other, will you give a superiority to our fex, which, in the debate of this morning, my Charlotte would not allow of.

I will begin my next letter with an account of this debate; and if I cannot comprise it in the compass I intend to bring it into, my one more letter may perhaps stretch into two.

LETTER XXXVII,

Lady G. In Continuation.

THE debate I mentioned began on Friday morning at breakfast time, brought on by fome of uncle Selby's good-natured particularities; for he will always have fomething to fay against women. I bespoke my brother's neutrality, and declared I would enter the lifts with Mr Selby, and allow all the other men present to be of his side. I had a flow of spirits. Man's usurpation, and woman's natural independency, was the topic. carried on my argument very triumphantly: Now and then a fly hint popt out by my brother, halfdisconcerted me; but I called him to order, and he was filent: Yet once he had like to have put me out—Wrapping his arms about himself with inimitable humour-O my Charlotte, faid he, how I love my country! England is the only fpot in the world in which this argument can be properly debated !- Very fly-Was it not ?

I made nothing of Mr Selby. I called him the tyrant of the family.—And as little of Mr Deane, Lord L. and still less of my own lord, who was as eager in the debate as if it concerned him more than any body to resist me; and this before my brother, who by his eyes, more than once, seemed to challenge me, because of the forry creature's earnestness. All those, however, were men of straw with me; and I thought myself very near making Mr Selby ask pardon of his dame for his thirty years' usurpation. In short, I had half-established our fex's superiority on the ruin of that of the sorry fellows, when the debate was closed, and referred to Mrs Shirley as moderatrix; my brother still excluded any share in it.—She indeed obliged me to lower my topfails a little.

" I think,

" th

· th

th ar

· m

· co fla

co na

. pe

· la

· W

· of

· m · fre

· in · no

ten

· kn

· th ch

· ufe

· of tu:

ar

· kn

Wi.

gu of

" I think, faid the venerable lady, women are generally too much confidered as a species apart. ' To be fure, in the duties and affairs of life, where they have different or opposite shares allotted them by Providence, they ought not to go out of their own fphere, or invade the men's province, any more than the men their's. Nay, I am fo ' much of this opinion, that though I think the ' confidence which fome men place in their wives, · in committing all their affairs to their care, very flattering to the opinion both of their integrity and capacity; yet I should not chuse (without confidering trouble) to interfere with the ma-' nagement without doors, which I think more properly the man's province, unless in some particu-· lar cafes.

But in common intercourse and conversation, why are we to be perpetually considering the Sex of the person we are talking to? Why must women always be addressed in an appropriated language; and not treated on the common sooting of reasonable creatures? And why must they, from a salse notion of modesty, be asraid of shewing themselves to be such, and affect a childish ignorance?

'I do not mean, that I would have women enter into learned disputes, for which they are rarely qualified: But I think there is a degree of knowledge very compatible with their duties; therefore not unbecoming them, and necessary to make them fit companions for men of sense: A character in which they will always be found more useful than that of a plaything, the amusement of an idle hour.

'No person of sense, man or woman, will venture to launch out on a subject with which they are not well acquainted. The lesser degree of knowledge will give place to the greater. This will secure subordination enough. For the advantages vantages of education which men must necessarily have over women, if they have made the proper use of them, will have set them so forward on the race, that we can never overtake them. But then don't let them despise us for this, as if their superiority were entirely sounded on a natural difference of capacity: Despise us as women, and value themselves merely as men: For it is not the hat or cap which covers the head, that decides the merit of it.

· In the general course of the things of this world, women have not opportunities of founding the depths of science, or of acquainting themselves · perfectly with polite literature: But this want of opportunity is not intirely confined to them. There are professions among the men no more favoura-· ble to these studies, than the common avocations For example; merchants, whose atof women. tention is (and perhaps, with regard to the pub-· lic, more usefully) chained down to their accounts. · Officers, both of land and fea, are feldom much · better instructed, though they may perhaps pass through a few more forms: And as for know-· ledge of the world, women of a certain rank have an equal title to it with fome of them. A learned man, as he is called, who should despise a fenfible one of these professions, and disdain to con-· verse with him, would pass for a pedant; and why not for despising or undervaluing a woman of fense, who may be put on the same footing? · Men, in common conversation, have laid it down · for a rule of good breeding, not to talk before women of things they don't understand; by which · means an opportunity of improving is loft; a very good one too; one that has been approved by the · ablest persons who have written on the education of children; because it is a means of learning in-· fenfibly, without the appearance of a task. Common

· 1

6 b

" t

6 f

6 C

« t

· t

· in · fi

A-(ta offi

len

fcr

WO

and pre

feel

low

. 0

6 W

· fi

· fc

· n

r

W

a

f r

· 1

s fe

omon subjects afford only common place, and are foon exhausted: Why, then, should conversation be confined to fuch narrow limits, and be liable to continual repetition; when, if people would fart less beaten subjects, many doubts and difficulties concerning them might be cleared up, and they would acquire a more fettled opinion of things (which is what the generality much want, from an indolence that hinders them from examining) at the same time that they would be better entertained, than with talking of the weather, and · fuch kind of infipidities?"

Lady W. applauding Mrs Shirley's sentiments, A-propos, said she; let me read you the speech (taking it out of her pocket-book) of an East-India officer, to a pedant, who had been displaying his talents, and running over with terms of art, and scraps of Latin, mingled with a profusion of hard words, that hardly any of the company understood; and which, at the same time that it diverted all present, cured the pretended scholar of his affectation for ever after. My lady read it, as follows:

" I am charmed with this opportunity, faid the officer, of discoursing with a gentleman of so much wit and learning; and hope I shall have his deci-fion in a point which is pretty nice, and concerns fome eastern manufactures, of ancient and reverend etymology. Modern critics are undetermined about them; but, for my part, I have always maintained, that Chints, Bullbulls, Morees, and Ponahuzzys, are of nobler and more generous uses than Doorguzees or Nourfourmannys:

Not but I hold against Byrampauts in favour of Niccannees and Boralchauders. Only I wish that fo accurate a judge would instruct me, why Tap-

* zils and Sallempores have given place to Negane-

00 hi

OI

le

ha

of

CI

M

gi

11

Sh

po

no

di

his

Sh

E

TI

we

for a

wa

as

to tha

COI

an

liv

im

you

me

not

* pouts? And why Bejatapoutz should be more e-" Reemed than the finer fabric of Blue Chelloes * ?"

A very good rebuke of affectation, faid Sir Charles, (and your ladyfhip hints it was an efficacious one.) It ferves to fhew, that men in their different attainments may be equally useful; in other words, that the knowledge of polite literature leads not to every part of useful science. I remember, that my Harriet distinguishes very properly, in some of her let. ters to her Lucy, between Language and Science; and that poor Mr Walden (that I think was his name) was pretty much disconcerted, as a pedant may fometimes be, when (and he bowed to his Harriet) he has a natural genius to contend with. She blushed, and bowed as she sat-And I remember, Sir, faid she, you promised to give me your animadversions on the letters I consented you should fee: Will you be pleafed to correct me now?

Correct you, my dearest life!—What a word is that? I remember, that, in the conversation in which you were obliged, against your will, to bear so confiderable a part, you demonstrated that genius, without deep learning, made a much more thining figure, in conversation, than learning without genius: But, upon the whole, I was a little apprehensive, that true learning might fuffer if languages were too flightly treated Mr Walden made one good observation, or rather remembered it, for it was long ago made, and will be always of weight, That the knowledge of languages, any more than the advantage of birth, was never thought lightly of by those who had pretensions to either. The knowledge of the Latin language, in particular, let me fay, is of a fingular use in the mastery of every science.

There are who aver, that men of parts have no occasion

Transcribed from a collection of papers, intitled, The Plain-dealer, in 2 Vols, Vol. I. No. 37.

occasion for learning: But, surely, our Shakespeare himself, one of the greatest geniuses of any country or age (who, however, is an adept in the superior learning, and knowledge of nature), would not have been a sufferer, had he had a greater thare of human learning, which is denied by him by some critics.

But, Sir Charles, faid Mr Deane, don't you think that Snakespeare, who lived before the great Milton, has an easier, pleasanter, and more intelligible manner of writing than Milton? If so, may it not be owing to Milton's greater learning, that Shakespeare has the advantage of that immortal poet in perspicuity?

Is the fact certain, my dear Mr Deane, that Milton wants perspicuity? I have been bold enough fometimes to think, that he makes a greater display of his reading, than was quite necessary to his unbounded subject. But the age in which Shakespeare flourished might be called the age of English learning, as well as of English bravery. The queen and her court, the very ladies of it, were more learned than any court of our English fovereigns were before, or hath been fince. What a prodigy of learning, in the short reign of Edward the VI. was the Lady Jane Grey! - Greek, as well as Latin, was familiar to her: So it was to Queen Elizabeth. And can it be supposed, that the natural geniuses of those ladies were more confined or limited, for their knowledge of Latin and Greek? Milton, though a little nearer us, lived in harsher and more tumultuous times.

O, Sir! faid Harriet, then I find I was a very impertinent creature in the conversation to which you refer.

Not fo, my dearest love!—Mr Walden, I remember, says, that learning in that assembly was not brought before a fair tribunal. He should have have known, that it had not a competent advocate in him.

But, Sir Charles, faid Mr Beauchamp, I cannot but observe, that too much stress is laid upon learning, as it is called, by those who have pretensions to it. You will not always find, that a scholar is a more happy man than an unlearned one. He has not generally more prudence, more wisdom, in the management of his affairs.

What, my dear Beauchamp, is this but faying, that there is great difference between theory and practice? This observation comes very generously, and, with regard to the ladies, very gallantly, from you, who are a learned man: But as you are also a very prudent man, let me ask you, Do you think you have the less prudence for your learning? If not, Is not learning a valuable addition?

But pray, Sir Charles, faid Mrs Selby, let me ask your opinion: Do you think, that if women had the fame opportunities, the same education as men, they would not equal them in their attainments?

Women, my dear Mrs Selby, are women fooner than men are men. They have not, therefore, generally, the learning-time that men have, if they had equal geniuses.

"If they had equal geniuses," brother! Very well. My dear fister Harriet, you see you have given your hand to one of the lords of the creation-Vassal! bow to your sovereign.

Sir Ch. My dearest love, take not the advice without the example.

Lady G. Your fervant, Sir. Well, but let me ask, Do you think that there is a natural inferiority in the faculties of the one sex? A natural superiority in those of the other?

Sir Gh. Who will answer this question for me ?

Not

Not Tif you is the mor I ha is a wommen

ly yeare period

T

that Thei fpeal rame vant may reful out (has 1 porti fexes that Aren bour ther ! and p ed ra male

Wo

nefice

Not I, faid Lord L. Not I, faid Mr Deane.

Not I, faid Mr Beauchamp.

Then I have fairly taken you in—You would, if you could, answer it in the ladies' favour. This is the same as a confession. I may therefore the more boldly pronounce, that, generally speaking, I have no doubt but there is.

Help me, dear ladies, faid I, to fight this battle out. You fay, Sir, you have no doubt that there is a natural inferiority in the faculties of us, poor women; a natural superiority in you, imperial men.

Generally speaking, Charlotte. Not individually you, ladies, and us, men: I believe all we who are present shall be ready to subscribe to your superiority, ladies.

I believe, brother, you fib: But let that pass.

Thank you, madam. It is for my advantage that it should; and perhaps for yours, smiling-There is a difference (pardon me, ladies, we are speaking generally) in the constitution, in the temperament, of the two fexes, that gives to the one advantages which it denies to the other: But we may not too-elofely purfue this fubject, though the refult, I am apt to believe, would put the matter out of dispute. Let us be more at large: Why has nature made a difference in the beauty, proportion, and symmetry, in the persons of the two fexes? Why gave it delicacy, foftness, grace, to that of the woman—as in the ladies before me: firength, firmness, to men; a capacity to bear labour and fatigue; and courage to protect the other? Why gave it a distinction, both in qualities and plumage, to the different fexes of the feathered race? Why in the courage of the male and female animals ?- The furly bull, the meek, the beneficent cow, for one instance?

We looked upon one another, Vol. VII. B b There are exceptions to general rules, proceeded he. Mrs Shirley surpasses all the men I ever knewin wisdom—Mrs Selby and Lady G.—

What of us, brother! What of us-to the advantage of your arguments?

Heroic Charlotte!—You are both very happily married—The men the women, the women the men, you can mutually affift and improve each other. But still—

Your fervant, brother, interrupted I.—Your fervant, Sir Charles, faid Mrs Selby.—And I fay, your fervant too, faid Mr Selby.

Who fees not that my fifter Charlotte is ready to disclaim the competition in fact, though not in words? Can there be characters more odious than those of a masculine woman and an effeminate man? What are the distinguishing characteristics of the two fexes? And whence this odiousness? There are indeed men, whose minds, if I may be allowed the expression, seem to be cast in a semale mould; whence the fops, foplings, and pretty fellows, who buzz about your fex at public places; women, whose minds feem to be cast in a masculine one; whence your Barnevelts, my dear, and most of the women who, at fuch places, give the men stare for stare, fwing their arms, look jolly; and those married women who are so kind as to take the reins out of their husbands' hands, in order to fave the honest men trouble.

Your fervant, Sir—Your fervant, Sir—And fome of them looked as if they had faid, You cannot mean me, I hope; and those who spoke not bowed and smiled thanks for his compliment to one-fourth of the fex.

My lord infultingly rubbed his hands for joy; Mr Selby crowed; the other men slily smiled, though they were afraid of giving a more open approbation.

O my bet wou

WO

dea exce dea ter my fhe faid mad not this cauf

ther an in if sh noth and ones of your of all y due fake, Wea purp my I Mrs fider

O my fifter! faid I, taking Harriet's hand, we women are mere nothings—We are nothing at all!

How, my Charlotte! Make you no difference between being everything and nothing?

Were it not, my dear ladies, proceeded he, for male protectors, to what infults, to what outrages, would not your fex be subject? Pardon me, my dearest love, if I strengthen my argument by your excellencies, bowing to his Harriet. Is not the dear creature our good Mrs Shirley's own daughter? All the seminine graces are hers. She is, in my notion, what all women should be—But wants she not a protector? Even a dream, a reverie—

O Sir, spare me, spare me! sweetly blushing, said the lovely Harriet. I own I should have made a very filly, a very pusillanimous man! It is not long since, you know, Lady G. that I brought this very argument in favour of-

Hush, Harriet! You will give up the semale cause.

That is not fair, Charlotte, rejoined my brother; you should not intercept the convictions of an ingenuous mind—But I will spare my Harriet, if she will endeavour, for her own sake, to let nothing disturb her for the suture but realities, and not any of those long, if they are inevitable ones.

But pray, Sir, faid I, proceed in your argument, if you have any more to fay.

O Charlotte! I have enough to fay, to filence all your opposition, were I to give this subject its due weight. But we are only, for pleasantry's sake, skimming over the surface of the argument. Weaker powers are given generally for weaker purposes, in the economy of Providence. I, for my part, however, disapprove not of our venerable Mrs Shirley's observation, that we are apt to consider the sex too much as a species apart: Yet it is B b 2 my opinion, that both God and nature has defigned a very apparent difference in the minds of both, as well as in the peculiar beauties of their persons. Were it not fo, their offices would be confounded, and the woman would not perhaps fo readily fubmit to those domestic ones in which it is their province to thine, and the men would be allotted the distaff, or the needle; and you yourselves, ladies, would be the first to despise such. I, for my part, would only contend, that we men should have power and right given us to protect and ferve your fex; that we should purchase and build for them; travel and toil for them; run through, at the call of providence, or of our king and country, dangers and difficulties; and, at last, lay all our trophies, all our acquirements, at your feet; enough rewarded in the conscience of duty done, and your favourable acceptance.

We were all of us again his humble fervants. It was in vain to urge the tyranny of fome husbands, when he could turn upon us the follies of some wives, and that wives and daughters were never more faulty, more undomestic, than at present; and when we were before a judge, who, though he could not be absolutely unpolite, would not flatter us, nor fpare our foibles.

However, it stuck a little with Harriet, that she had given cause to Sir Charles, in the dispute which she formerly bore a part in, relating to learning and languages (a), to think her more lively than she ought to be, and had spoken too lightly of languages. She, sweetly blushing, like a young wife solicitous for the good opinion of the beloved of her heart, revived that cause.

He spoke very highly in her praise, upon the occasion; owned, that the letters he had been favoured with the sight of, had given him deeper impres-

ions

fior

for her

fwe

of .

you

he,

it, t

yet,

cha

bot

(for goo

twee

une grea

Mr

ages

Hom

the pref

ploy

be i negi

ges t fcien

thou

they parts

and ( (wer

cann

can r trave

ferva

miral ledge ding

F

fions in her favour, than even her beauty; hoped for farther communications; appliauded her for her principles, and her inoffensive vivacity—that sweet, that innocent vivacity, and noble frankness of heart, said he, taking her hand, which I hope you will never think of restraining.

As to the conversation you speak of, proceeded he, I repeat, that I was apprehensive, when I read it, that languages were spoken of in it slightly; and yet, perhaps, I am mistaken. You, my Beauchamp, I think, if my dearest life will oblige us both by the communication, and chuses to do fo (for that must be the condition on which all her goodness to us must be expected), thall be judge between us: You know, better than I, what stores of unexhausted knowledge lie in the works of those great antients, which fuffered in the hands of poor Mr Walden: You know what the past and present ages have owed, and what all future will owe, to Homer, Aristotle, Virgil, Cicero: You can take in the necessity there is of restraining innovation, and preferving old rules and inflitutions, and of employing the youth of our fex, who would otherwife be much worse employed (as we see in those who. neglect their studies) in the attainment of languages that can convey to them fuch lights in every fcience: Though it were to be wished, that morals should take more of the learner's attention than they generally do. You know, that the truest parts of learning are to be found in the Roman and Greek writers; and you know, that translation (were every thing worthy our notice translated) cannot convey those beauties which scholars only can relish; and which learned foreigners, if a man travels, will expect should not have escaped his obfervation. As to the ladies, Mrs Shirley has admirably observed, that there is a degree of knowledge very compatible with their duties (condescending excellence! bowing to Mrs Shirley) and high, B b 3

ly becoming them; fuch as will make them rejoice, and, I will add, improve a man of fenfe, fweeten his manners, and render him a much more fociable, a much more amiable creature, and of confequence, greatly more happy in himself, than otherwise he would be from books and folitude.

Well but, brother, you faid just now, that we were only, for pleafantry's fake, skimming over the furface of the argument; and that you had enough to fay to filence all my opposition, were you to give the subject its due weight. I do affure you, that, to filence all my opposition, you must have a vast deal more to fay than you have said hitherto; and yet you have thrown in some hints which stick with me, though you have concluded with fome magnificent intimations of superiority over us -Power and right to protect, travel, toil for us, and lay your trophies at our feet, and fo forth—Surely, furely, this is diminishing us, and exalting yourfelves, by laying us under high obligations to your generosity. Pray, Sir, let us have, if you please, one or two intimations of those weightier arguments, that could, as you fancy, filence your Charlotte's opposition. I say, that we women, were our education the fame-You know what I would be at-Your weightier arguments, if you pleafe-or a specimen only en passant.

Supposing, my Charlotte, that all human souls are, in themselves, equal; yet the very design of the different machines in which they are inclosed, is to superinduce a temporary difference on their original equality; a difference adapted to the different purposes for which they are designed by Providence in the present transitory state. When those purposes are at an end, this difference will be at an end too. When sex ceases, inequality of souls will cease; and women will certainly be on a foot with men, as to intellectuals, in Heaven. There, indeed, will you no longer have lords over you;

neither production of You Ch

litt

nei

how Sir, kno Du Wi wha mill bur cou

mig

mit the in m has vini othe A li wou precebut flam ty, a

But, Sir

life.

neither will you have admirers; which, in your present estimate of things, will perhaps balance the account. In the mean time, if you can see any occasions that may call for stronger understandings in male life than in your own; you, at the same time, see an argument to acquiesce in a persuasion of a present inequality between the two sexes. You know, I have allowed exceptions. Will you, Charlotte, compliment yourself with being one?

Now, brother, I feel, methinks, that you are a little hard upon Charlotte: But, ladies, you fee how the matter stands.—You are all silent.—But, Sir, you graciously allow, that there is a degree of knowledge which is very compatible with the Duties of us women, and highly becoming us: Will you have the goodness to point out to us what this compatible learning is, that we may not mistake—and so become excentric, as I may say, burst our orb, and do more mischief than ever we could do good ?

y

n oe

ls

ot

e,

4;

er

Could I point out the boundaries, Charlotte, it might not to some spirits be so proper: The limit might be treated as the one prohibited tree in the garden. But let me fay, That genius, whether in man or woman, will push itself into light. if it has a laudable tendency, let it, as a ray of the divinity, be encouraged, as well in the one fex as the other: I would not, by any means, have it limited: A little knowledge leads to vanity and conceit. would only, methinks, have a parent, a governor, a preceptor, bend its strength to restrain its foibles; but not throw fo much cold water upon the facred flame as should quench it; since, if he did, stupidity, at least dejection, might take place of the emanation, and the person might be miserable for life.

Well, then, we must compromise, I think, said I. But, on recollection, I thought I had enjoined you, Sir Charles, to the observance of a neutrality. Harriet, Harriet, whispered I, we are only, after all, to be allowed, as far as I can find, in this temporary state, like tame doves, to go about house, and so-forth, as Biddy fays, in the play.

Harriet, could she have found time (but, by mutual consent, they are hardly ever asunder), would have given you a better account of this conversation than I have done; so would Lucy: But take it, as it offers, from

Your ever-affectionate

CHARLOTTE G.

LETTER XXXVIII.

Miss Lucy SELBY, To Lady L.

Sunday, Nov. 19.

MY dear Lady G. insists upon my writing to your ladyship an account of the appearance which the loveliest couple in England made this day at church.

We all thought nothing could have added to the charms of our Harriet's person; but yet her dress and jewels did. I sighed, from pride for the honour of semale beauty, to think they did. Can my dear Harriet, thought I, exquisitely lovely as she is, in any dress, be ornamented in richer silks than common, by costly laces, by jewels? Can dress add grace to that admirable proportion, and those since features, to which no painter yet has ever done justice, though every family related to her has a picture of her, drawn by a different hand of eminence?

We admired the bridegroom as much as we did her, when (before we could have thought he had been half ready) he joined Mrs Shirley, my aunt Selby, and me, in the great parlour, completely dreffed. But what we most admired in him was, that his the us, daz hon ratl con valu call her ang wha ces She Go and life. will > face love nefs fo h

but

her M the politax

her, have of a fwee native

native dignity and ease, and that inattentiveness to his own figure and appearance, which demonstrate the truly fine gentleman, accustomed, as he is, to be always elegant.

When his lady presented herself to him, and to us, in all her glory, how did the dear creature dazzle us! We involuntarily arose, as if to pay our homage to her. Sir Charles approached her with rather an air of greater freedom than usual, as if he confidered not the drefs, as having added to the value he has for her: Yet loveliest of women, he called her; and, taking her hand, prefented her to her grandmamma: Receive, and again bless my angel, faid he, best of parents !- How lovely! But what is even all this amazing loveliness to the graces of her mind? They rife upon me every hour. She hardly opens her lips, but I find reason to bless God, and bless you both, my dear ladies: for God and you have given her goodness .- My dearest life, allow me to fay, that this fweet person, which will be your perfection in every stranger's eye, is but a fecond in mine.

Instruct me, Sir, said she, bashfully bowing her face upon his hand, as he held hers, to deserve your love, by improving the mind you have the goodness to prefer; and no creature was ever on earth fo happy as I fhall be.

My dear daughter, faid her delighted grandmother, you fee, can hardly bear your goodness, Sir. You must blame her for something, to keep down her pride.

My Harriet, replied he, cannot be proud of what the filkworm can do for her, or of the jeweller's polith: But, now you call upon me, madam, I will tax her with a real fault. I open all my heart too her, as subjects ocasionally offer: I want her to have a will, and to let me know it. The frankest of all female hearts will not treat me with that sweet familiarity which banishes distance. You see, my dearest love, that I chide you before your parental friends, and your Lucy.

It is your own fault, Sir: Indeed it is. You prevent me in all my wishes. Awe will mingle with the love of persons who are under perpetual obligation. My dear two mamma's, you must not blame me; you must blame Sir Charles: He takes away, by his goodness, even the power of making suitable acknowledgments, and then complains I do not speak.

My uncle Selby came in. He stood looking upon my cousin for a few moments in silence; then broke out, Sir Charles Grandison, you may indeed boast, that you have for a wife the flower of the British world, as you once called her: And, let me tell you, niece, you have for a husband the noblest and gallantest of men. Happy, happy pair! say I. My dear Mr Deane, said he, who just then entered, if you will keep me in countenance, I will venture to salute that charming creature.

Sir Charles presented his bride to them both. With a bent knee she received their falutes. At that moment came in the three lords, who followed the example. Lord W. called her angel—Sir Charles looked delighted with the praises of his bride.

The rest of the company being come, we proceeded to church.

How were early; but the church was crouded. How were the charming couple admired on their alighting, and as they walked to their pew!—Never did my coufin herfelf look so lovely. How charmingly looked the bridegroom! But he forgot not that humble deportment, full of reverence for the place, and the divine offices, which seemed to make him absent for the time to that splendor and beauty which took every eye out of our own pew.

beh ville requ he l

> not which thin he fl we f

as h cept T peop ed d bride the c pany for i doub ed co She not l fo pr obser than faw face ' the c not fe been Lady She h calls But 1

His d

he loc

pew. His example was enough to give a proper behaviour, had it been needful, to every one in it.

I should have told your ladyship, that Mr Greville had fent, over night, a fullenly-complaifant request to my aunt, in writing, importing, that as he heard the bride would make her appearance on the morrow, the bride-men and maids, if it broke not into our ceremonial, would accept of his pew. which is over-against ours, for the look of the thing, he faid; though he could not promife but he should all the day curse the occasion. By this we found he was not gone to Lady Frampton's, as he had defigned. His offer was thankfully accepted.

d

n

There was a great concourse of the genteelest people there. Everybody, men and women, looked delighted on the occasion. The humility of the bride was tried, by the respects paid her between the offices, by all who had ever been in her company. They should have reined-in their own pride; for it was to that, as much as to respect to her, I doubt not, that their notice was owing. She looked conscious, bashful; fly, I told her afterwards. She hates the word: But, as I faid, she should not have given the idea, that made no other word fo proper to express it, and which must be more observable in her generally open free countenance, than in that of any other. She more than once faw devoirs paid her by a leer, when her fweet face was fo disposed, that, had she not returned the compliment, it might have passed that she had not feen them. But what an infensible must have been my coufin, had the not been proud of being Lady Grandison! She is not quite an angel yet: She has a few femalities, as my uncle whimfically calls our little foibles. So, perhaps, the should. But nobody faw the least defect in your brother. His dress most charmingly became him; and when he looked upon his bride, his eyes were fixed on her eyes with fuch a fweet benignity and complaifance, as if he faw her mind through them, and could not spare a glance to her ornaments: Yet by his own dress he shewed, that he was no stoical non-conformist to the fashion of the world. But the politeness and respect with which he treated her, did them both credit, and credit (as Lady G. observed) to the whole sex. Such unaffected tenderness in his respect, and known to be so brave, so good a man!—O my dear Lady L. what an admirable man is your brother! What a happy creature is my Harriet!

When divine fervice was over, I was afraid our procession, as I may call it, would have been interrupted by the compliments of some of the gentry of our acquaintance, whose opened pew-doors shewed their readiness to address them: But all passed in silent respect from gentlemen and ladies. My cousin, when she came home, rejoiced, that one of her parading times was over: But when, my dearest love, said Sir Charles, will the time be pass, that all who see you will admire you?

The church in the afternoon was still more crouded than before. How were Sir Charles and my uncle blessed by the poor, and people of low degree, for their well-dispensed bounty to them!

My coufin has delighted Mrs Shirley, by telling her, that Sir Charles had faid there would be a rite wanting, till he and she had communicated, according to the order of the church, at the altar, on this particular occasion.

Just now is every thing settled that Sir Charles withed to be settled. Lady G. will acquaint you with particulars, I doubt not.

Permit me to commend myself to your ladyship's favour, as one of the Humblest and sincerest of your Servants,

Lucy Selby.

P. S. Lady

But I

Vo

P. S. Lady G. has half broke my heart.

On perusal of what I have written, she says, I have not done my best: I have not given half particulars enough.—In short, she finds a multitude of faults with me—Even calls me names, Sorry girl, Lazy, and I can't tell what.

But do you, madam, acquit me, and I shall be easy.

I told her, that I thought I had been very minute.

What! to a lying-in woman, she says, who has no variety before her! All one dull chamber-scene, hourly acted over again—
The subject so rich!

I answered, It should then have had the richest pen!—Why did she not write herself? If it was not for laziness-sake, it was for self-sake, that she did not. As I knew Lady L. would have been a gainer by the change of pen, I had much rather been in the company for which she quitted the task, than grubbing pens in my closet; and all to get nothing but discommendation.

I have flewn her this my postscript. She raves: But I am hardened. She will soon have an opportunity to supply all my defects in person.

Vol. VII. Cc

S

11

t

1,

e

re es of

to a a d, ar,

les

ou

ly-

BY.

INDEX.

I

HIS

Alla Bag

 $B_{\mathcal{A}}$

Re

E

HISTORICAL AND CHARACTERISTICAL.

TO THE

SEVENTH VOLUME OF THIS WORK.

DVENTURES of love, women have often more courage in them than men, 190. Aged persons should study to promote in young people those innocent pleasures which they themselves were fond of in youth, 191.

Allestree, Mr, a guest at Sir Charles Grandison's nuptials, 239, 245.

Bagenhall, James, Efq; ruined, and becomes a fugitive; leaving his wife in the most destirate circumstances, 132, 137.

Barclay, Miss, a guest at Sir Charles Grandison's nuptials, 233, 239, 248.

Barnevelt, Miss, how, probably, she would have acted had the been of the other fex, 190. Pleafantly cenfured by Sir Charles Grandison, 200.

Beauchamp, Sir Harry, his recovery despaired of, 51, 91. Defires to fee Sir Charles Grandifon, 137. Recommends his lady to him, and makes him a truftee in his will, 149. Sir Charles again attends him, 191.

Cc 2 Beauchamp. Beauchamp, Mr Edward, present at Sir Charles Grandison's nuptials; particulars of his agreeable behaviour in, and after, every part of the solemnity, 223, 232, 237, 248, 262, 265, 270, 279. Defends the cause of the ladies on the subject of learning and languages, 288.

Beaumont, Mrs, her arguments with Lady Clementina, tending to diffuade her from taking the veil, 13. And in behalf of the Count of Belvedere, 9.

Beauty, 89.

Belvedere, Count of, his character from Signor Jeronymo, 8.

Bridal dreffes, fentiments on them, 176, 220.

Byron, Mr and Mrs, parents of Miss Harriet, their excellent characters, 268.

Byron, Miss Harriet, scenes of courtship, and tender and polite address, 29, 36. Sir Charles Grandison's exemplary behaviour at church, 42. Mr Greville's dying speech, as he called it, to her, 4: [See Mr Greville.] A happy day at Shirley manor, in which Sir Charles's gallantry and politeness charms them all, 52 to 57. She takes a little tour with feveral of her friends attended by Sir Charles, 59. She praises him for his well-directed charities in the excursion; and describes several tender scenes between him and herfelf, 59 to 64. Diftreffed by her uncle's forwardness, 59. She gives the particulars of the half-fretful, half-humorous dialogue that paffed between her punctilious aunt and unpunctilious uncle, 61 to 63. Sir Charles urges her for an early day, 65. She thinks him too precipitating, 69. She accidentally drops a paper in which the had given an account of the tenderest part of their last conversation, and which, to her great diffurbance, he was feen to take up, 75. But returns it to her unread, She propofes Emily's living with them, 0

·S

P

fi

F

C

· W

h

to

r

a

T

je

a fi

N

g tı

. d

p

t

I

ii

W

fe

d

h

1.

S

1

W

fi

a

1

77 to 85. She chides Lady G. for the contents of a free letter, and defends her own conduct to Sir Charles, which that lady cenfured as too punctilious, 94 to 98. Visited, on their return from their little excursion, by Mr Greville, Mr Fenwick, Miss Orme, 100. Another tender conversation between Sir Charles and her, in which the is laudably explicit in acknowledging her love, yet adheres to her opinion, that he is too precipitating as to the day 101. Bends his knee to her for the generous expression of her regard to the merits of Clementina, 107. Her appeals to her grandmother, her aunt and Lucy, on her thinking him too precipitating, 111. Their decree, 114. Presents her with a set of jewels, 123. She humoroufly censures Lucy and Nancy Selby on their tediousness in dref-What passed at a breakfast visit at Miss Orme's, 125. Her magnanimity with regard to Lady Clementina, 136. Apprehends treachery from Mr Greville, 139. Terrible dreams, 140. Pathetic apostrophe on his appearance in fafety, 142. Tender parting between them, on his taking leave to fet out for London, 143. His letter to her from London. inclosing one from Jeronymo, acquainting him with the wifes of Clementina and their family for his speedy mariage, including that lady's address to them both on that subject; he re-urges her on this occasion to accelerate his happy day, 149 to 153. Her grateful answer, 166 to 172. She is apprehensive of Mr Greville's moodiness, 176. And still more, on his message that she will not be too fecure, 179. Excessively terrified by an anonymous note, giving ground to apprehend that Mr Greville would affaffinate Sir Charles on his return from London, 183 to 186. Her extreme joy on his fafe arrival, 187. The day fixed, 20:, & feq. She farther thews her generous concern for Lady Clementina, 208. Her tender behaviour to Miss Jervois, 235. Her emotion on signing the marriage articles, 242. The nuptial procession: The celebration: The wedding-feast: The ball: Retirement: Morning congratulations, benedictions, 246 to 28z. Lady G. applauds their behaviour to each other, 279. Their appearance at church, 296. See Sir Charles Grandison.

Cautions to women in a beginning love, 84.

Cenfure, 127.

Chamber marriages, 206. Charity, 61, 278, 280.

Clarkson, Miss, a Yorkshire beauty, 122, 125.

Clementina della Porretta, gives hopes to her friends that she will yield to their earnest intreaties in favour of the Count of Belvedere, 3 to 7. Postpones the hopes she had given them, till she heard from Sir Charles, 153. Receives the expected letters from him: Her observations on the contents of them, 156 to 158. Reads with pleasure the character he gives Miss Byron, and generously wishes him happy with so excellent a young lady, 156. Defires to live fingle, 160. Shews particularity; wishes to go to England, but not till Sir Charles is married, 161. Allowed to vifit Mrs Beaumont at Florence, 162. Isuniform and steady in her wishes for Sir Charles's marriage, ib. Addresses herself in writing to Miss Byron to accelerate her own happiness and his, 164.

Compliments, 14, 126.

Conceit, 94.

Confolation, 7, 145.

Coquets, 127, 200.

Courage, fentiments upon it, 193.

Courtship, sentiments relating to it, 41, 55, 65, 69, 78, 110, 126, 176, 190, 210.

Dancing, 274.

Deane,

De

De

Di

 D_r

 D_r

El

En

Et

Fa

Fe

Fe

Fe

 F_{ε}

Fe

Deane, Mr, draws up the marriage articles, and reads them to Miss Byron and her assembled friends, 242, 248.

Delicacy, fentiments relating to it, 11, 31, 83.

Dismission of a lover, 37.

Dreams, terrible ones of Miss Byron, 140. No regard to be paid to those illusions, 142, 213.

Drefs, Sir Charles Grandison's notions on propriety of it; and reasons for modernizing in his own, 103.

Elizabeth, Queen, her learning, 287.

English readers, fond of story, whether probable or improbable, 261,

Everard Grandison, his behaviour when vicebitten, 86. Released from his promise of marriage; and his affairs likely to be restablished, by his wine-merchant's rich widow, 87.

Example, fentiments on the force of it, 11, 35, 42, 128, 129.

Falconbridge, Mr, a guest at Sir Charles Grandifon's nuptials, 239, 248.

Falconbridge, Sir Thomas, a companion of Mr. Selby in his field sports, 239.

Female antipathies rallied, 190.

Female delicacy is of a more delicate texture than that of men, 31. See Delicacy.

Female dignity, 34.

Femality, fentiments upon it, 11, 17, 34, 45, 61 to 64, 77, 83, 85, 88, 201, 211 to 213, 221, 274, 299.

Fenwick, Mr, his report of the rencounter between Sir Charles Grandison and Mr Greville at Northampton, 19 to 24. Offers himself as a suitor to Miss Lucy Selby, 25. His account of Sir Charles's pleasant and lively behaviour among a large company of gentlemen, at Mr Greville's, 125. Rejected by Miss Lucy Selby, resolves to bring a wife from Carlisle, 148.

Filial piety, 103, 143.

Frankness of heart, co.

French, fond of fentiment, English of story, 26r. Generosity, sentiments on that noble quality, 203.

Generous lover, 78, 145, 181.

Giacomo della Porretta, offers to obtain the general consent to Lady Clementina's marriage with Sir Charles Grandison, if she will give up her wishes after a sequestered life, 153. Recants his mistaken grounds for exception, and repents of his rude behaviour to Sir Charles, 154. Fresh motives from Sir Charles's letters to his sister and Jeronymo, for his urgency of her to marry, ib. With a view to favour the Count of Belvedere, 161.

Girls, the beginning and progress of love in giddy ones, 84, 85.

Godfrey, Mr, a guest at Sir Charles Grandison's nuptials, 239, 248.

Good man, 52, 125, 277.

a Good woman is one of the greatest glories of the creation, 221.

Grandison, Sir Charles, another letter from Signor Jeronymo to him, 1. Lady G. again praises him for his celerity in business, 87. He is not one, the tells Mifs Byron, who values a bleffing the more for its being dear, 91. He is, she fays, above aiming at wit, 95. He engages, by his gallant behaviour, the esteem of Miss Orme against her will, 99, 100. Pursues his father's tafte, where innocent to be followed; particularly with regard to drefs, and magnificence of spirit, 104. Pities Lady Olivia to Miss Byron, and praises her for some good qualities, 106. Never wilfully gave pain either to the motherly or fifterly heart, nor yet to that of any other woman, ib. His regard to truth in complimenting, 126. His high character among the ladies abroad, 127. Is as free from aufterity and uncharitableness, as from oftentation and affectation

h

fe

fectation, 128. Disclaims preaching himself to bad men, who know their duty, and have proper monitors, ib. Thinks more is to be done with fuch by innocently relaxing than by ftrictness of behaviour; yet admires those who do not relax, if they have got above moroseness, austerity and uncharitableness, ib. Shews his benevolence to men of different persuasions, 129. His fentiments on schism, and on prescribing to tender consciences, ib. Evades a question put to him about the Methodifts, by leading Miss Byron (oppressed by her uncle's raillery) in a gallant manner out of the company, 130. He communicates to her a despairing letter of Sir Hargrave Pollexfen, who requests him, in it, to be his executor, 131, & feg. Tender fcene between them on this occasion, 124, 125. Her generofity with regard to Lady Clementina engages his gratitude and admiration, 135, 136. His munificence to Mr Bagenhall's wife, on her husband's becoming a fugitive, 138. His compassion for Sir Hargrave; his concern for his Beauchamp on his father's approaching destiny; pity for Lady Beauchamp; and dutiful regrets on remembering his own father, 143, 144. Tender parting between him and Miss Byron, on his fetting out for London, 145, 146. He visits Sir Harry Beauchamp in extremity; who reveals certain fecrets to him, and commits his lady to his protection, 149. Visits the despairing Sir Hargrave, ib. Sends Miss Byron a letter which he has received from Signor Jeronymo, in which Lady Clementina, and feveral of her friends, request him to marry, 153, 154, & feq. Miss Jervois writes to him, on her prefenting her mother and Mr O'Hara with a chariot, without confulting him or his fifters, 167, & feq. His indulgent answer, 172, 173, 174. Her chankful reply 174, 175. [See Miss Jervois. 7

Jervois. Extricates himself from Greville's gloomy machinations by his magnanimity, 198, 199. He makes the facetious Mr Selby observe decorum, without intending it, ib. Encomium on his presence of mind, modesty, and vivacity, The DAY is come-Lady G. and Miss Lucy Selby join to describe the dresses, the cavalcade, the procession, the behaviour, of the happy pair, and the good order, decency, and respect, observed by the applauding multitude, 246, & feq. Debate on the superiority and inferiority of the two fexes; in which he vindicates the cause of learning and languages, but ill-supported formerly by Mr Walden, 282, & feq. Description of the bride dressed for her appearance at church, 296. His ease, dignity, and inattentiveness to his own dress on the same oceafion, though no Roical non-conformift to the fashion, ib. His behaviour at church, 200. I'e fays there will be a rite wanting, till he and the have communicated at the altar, on this particular occasion, according to the order of the church, 300.

Grandison, Miss Charlotte, or Lady G. her remarks on the treatment of her brother at Selbyhouse: on his noble behaviour and address, 10, & feg. Her description of two bashful lovers encreasing their own difficulties, 14. Defends the magnanimity of her brother in his behaviour to Clementina, 14 to 16. And cautions Miss Byron to avoid affectation, 17. Her further observations on Miss Byron's conduct, 83, 84. Praises Miss Jervois, 84, 85. Her observations on the susceptibility of young girls, miscalled love, 85. Her favourable opinion of marriages of discretion, such as she supposes was Mr Selby's, 85, 86. Her description of her cousin Grandison's conscious behaviour in her presence, and account of his intended marriage, 86

Gre

h vi

of

fo

ha

86 to 88. Her further instructions to Miss Byron, as to Sir Charles's fupposed precipitation, 88, 90. Rallies her aunt Eleanor for her carefulness of a letter of Sir Charles's, and of the uses to which she puts her lettercafe, 90, 91. Lends Miss Jervois money, and thinks her extravagant, 92. Her ludicrous observations on the gratitude of male birds, and ingratitude of husbands, 93. Retracts her halty censure of Miss Jervois for extravagance, 206. [See Miss Jervois.] Is of opinion that Lady Clementina will marry the Count of Belvedere, 211, 212. Is an enemy to the poets, and why, 214. Congratulates Miss Byron on her auptial-day's being fixed, ib. Her description of the joy occasioned by a wedding, to the workwomen employed on the occafion, 220. Rallies her brother, 229. And Miss Byron, 230. Gives an account of what passed on the day preceding the marriage, 232 to 245. -And of the wedding-day, 246, & feq.-And. in conjunction with Lucy Selby, of the order of procession, 247, 248, 249 to 251 .- Of her brother's noble behaviour during the ceremony, 256, 257.—And in the vestry, 258, 259. Her preferable opinion of marriages of prudence, to those that follow the romantic kind of love, 256, 260. Gives an account of the rest of the transactions of the day, 263 to 274. She raifes a debate on the natural independency of women, 279, 282 to 296.

Greville, Mr, the issue of his insult disgraceful to himself, 19, to 25. Her character from Sir Charles Grandison, 38. His uncommon behaviour to Miss Byron at Selby-house, in presence of all her friends, and of Sir Charles Grandison, 43, to 50. He sickens when got home, having acted a part too great for his powers, 51. Visited by Sir Charles, who thinks that Miss

r

e,

Byron

Byron might have reformed him, 52, 53. His visit at Selby-house, 99. Visited again by Sir Charles, 121 to 125. Wishes that Miss Byron's wedding-day were over; and becomes gloomy and disconsolate, 176. Resolves to hate her, ib. His threatening message to her by Miss Orme, not to be too secure, 178. Denounces destruction to Sir Charles; and fets out with armed fervants to meet him on his return to Northamptonshire, 184. His continued moodiness, and ill-temper, 189. Overcome by Sir Charles's magnanimity, 199, 200. Inftance of his fullen complaifance, 299.

Grief, 245.

Guardian, what a worthy one will and will not do, 77.

Happiness, 36.

Hawkins, Mr, steward to Mr Selby, appointed to direct at the tenants' feaft, 218.

Holles, Miss Kitty and Patty, guests at Sir Charles Grandison's nuptials, 233, 239, 248. Cannot think of marrying, after having feen his graceful behaviour to his lady, 276.

Homer, raved at by Lady G. 214.

Hoops, the indecency of wearing large ones, 55. Husband, Miss Jervois's etymology of the word, Husband and wife, 73. Jeronymo della Porretta, gives particulars concerning Lady Clementina, and urges Sir Charles Grandison to marry, in order to set her the example, I to 10. Further account of her adherence to her former resolution, and written request to Sir Charles to marry, 153 to 165.

Jervois, Mrs Helen, now made her interest to be good, 87. She behaves tenderly to her daughter, 160 to 161. Converts her husband to Methodifm, 91, 168. Their prudence in refufing to accept of a chariot presented by Miss Jervois, because

t

b

Indi

Infa

Infer

Inte

Intel

Ford

illr

cal

To

hin cre

nob

fup

Keelin

L. Ea

Learn

Libert

Love I

m

P

gr

because she had not consulted either her guardian or his fifters upon it, 170.

Fervois, Miss Emily, her request made to Miss Byron to be permitted to live with her guardian and her when married, 77. Borrows money of Lady G. 92, 93. For what purpose, explained by herself in a confessional letter to her guardian, 167 to 172. Her guardian's indulgent anfwer to her, 273, 274. Her grateful reply, 274, 275. Writes to her guardian for leave to be present at his nuptials, 224. Her emotion on her arrival at Selby-house, 227. Description of Miss Byron and her in the most amiable attitudes, in a select conversation, 235, 236. A bride-maid at the nuptials, at her own request, Her behaviour on the marriage, 263. 265, 269 to 271, 275. More of her, 278, 279. Indulgence, 191.

Infants, the advantages of their crying, if not im-moderately, 232.

Inferiority and superiority of the two sexes, 282.

Integrity, the consciousness of it, and a firm trust in Providence, will carry a man through the greatest difficulties, 136.

Intellects of men and women, difference between them, 190.

Jordan, John, Esq; Sir Hargrave, in his desperate illness (being uneasy in his own reslections), calls in question the sincerity of his friend Mr Jordan's reformation, on his forbearing to visit him, 134.

L. Earl of, his respectful behaviour to his lady does credit to himself, 73. More of this worthy nobleman, 221, 223, 260, 272.

Learning, the cause of learning and languages supported by Sir Charles Grandison, 282.

Libertines, 55, 86.

-

oe

г, nto

is.

ife

Love not laudable, 260.

Vol. VII. D

Love

Love at first fight in a man is an indelicate paroxysm; but in a woman, who expects protection and instruction from an husband, much more so, 14, 115, 160.

Love on one fide, discretion on the other, is better

Orn

C

h

1 te

P

m

he

th

ca

17 pu

rat

Pit

her

tio

way

in '

be l foo

cipl

WOI

Praise

Precep

Prude

Over

Pare

Perf

Phyli

Pity,

Plato

Poets

Polite

Pollex

than love on both, 85.

Mansfield, Sir Thomas, and his lady and family, begin to visit, and be visited by the Keelings, their late adversaries, 90.

Marescotti, Father, endeavours to persuade Lady Clementina that her late disorder was a judgment, 7.

Marriage of Sir Charles Grandison to Miss Byron, 246.

Marriages, chamber-marriages neither decent nor godly, according to Mr Selby, 206.

Meannesses, 125. Melancholy, 150.

Men and women, fentiments relating to them, 211.

Merceda, Solomon, Sir Hargrave Pollexfen affected with his fad catastrophe, 133. His exit full of horror and despair, 138.

Milliners, their flattery of their young customers, 170.

Milton, Mr Deane thinks he has less perspicuity than Shakespeare, though living after him, 287. Sir Charles Grandison questions the truth of that opinion, and accounts for it, if sact, ib. Modesty and meekness characteristic qualities in women, 67.

Nedham, Misses, two young ladies present at Sir Charles Grandison's nuptials, declares for public weddings from the good order and decorum observed in his, 163.

New-married pair, their proper behaviour to each other, 176.

...

Orme, Mr, returns from Lisbon somewhat amended in health, 176. Visits Miss Byron, who receives ceives him kindly, 178. Intends to go abroad again, 217.

Orme, Miss, her reserve on the first sight of Sir Charles Grandison dissipated by his gallant behaviour, 99, 100. Invites him to her brother's, 122. Account of that visit, 125 to 127. She tells Miss Byron, that her brother has some pleasure on resection, on his own rejection, that neither Fenwick nor Greville is to be the happy man, 177. What passed between Greville and her on the near approach of Miss Byron's nuptials, 178. Affected, in tenderness to her brother, on the nuptial-day being set, 217.—However, blesses Miss Byron on the occasion, and calls her happy, 217, 218.

Over-generofity, 72.

Parents and children, fentiments relating to them,

Persuasion, in certain cases more cruel than com-

Physicians, 91.

Pity, who would not fo act as to invite the admiration, rather than pity, of a worthy man, 218. Pity and love next door neighbours, 245.

Platonic love, 91.

of.

b.

a ir

b-

m ch

d-

re-

ves

Poets, inveighed against by Lady G. and excluded her common-wealth, for their inflaming descriptions, 2-14. See Homer.

Polite, politeness, 34, 89.

Pollexsen, Sir Hargrave, continues in a deplorable way, 91. His desponding letter to Dr Bartlett, in which he requests Sir Charles Grandison to be his executor, 121 to 134. Visited again, and soothed by Sir Charles, 146.

Praife, 116.

Precept, less effectual with men of abandoned principles than example, 128.

Prude, the dangerous misapplication of that word, 69.

Dd 2

Prudence,

Prudence, 87, 261.

Prudery, 69.

Public places, 147. Punctilios, 108, 109.

Raillery, some men cannot appear to advantage unless they make their friend a butt to shoot at, 44.

Religion, 129,

Remorfe, 86, 91, 131, 145.

Reresby, Lord, his character, 239. A brideman at Sir Charles Grandison's nuptials, 239, 248.

Roberts, Mr, a guest at Sir Charles Grandison's nuptials, 239, 248.

S. Lady Anne, more of her, 229.

Saunders, Richard, Sir Charles Grandison's gentleman, often his almoner, 61. Carries relief to Mrs Bagenhall from Sir Charles, 138.

Selby, Mrs, present at Sir Charles Grandison's nuptials, 248, 272.

Selby, George, Efq; defires to live upon good terms with Mr Greville, and why, 39. Difficult to restrain his honest zeal in favour of Sir Charles Grandison, 59. Humorous but earnest dialogue between him and his lady on this fubject, 143, et seq. A zealous man for the church, 119. Whimfically declares his diflike of the Methodists, 129. By his good-natured jests, throws Miss Byron into confusion, ib. Called home on an alarming occasion, 184. thens unintendedly the alarm, 185. Out-argued on the subject of punctilio, 195, to 198. Why pleafantly referred by Lady G. to the rest of the family, 210. His headstrong joy on his niece's approaching nuptials, 217. His preparations for the folemnity, 208. Kept in order by Sir Charles, unknown to himfelf, 230. His character from Lady G. 231. Marshals the nuptial procession, 247. His behaviour in the procession, 252, 253. In the church, as nuptial-father,

Se

Se

1 2 2

fode

C I 30 ho tie

Self-Pr Senti Sexes

Selby

Shake

tial-father, 251. In the vestry, 260. In returning from church, 261. On coming home, 263. His archness diverted by Sir Charles, 265. Insists on the bridegroom's waiting on the bride at dinner, as he had formerly done on his, 267. The part he bears at the ball, 271. Gently reprimanded by Sir Charles, for endeavouring to put the bride out of countenance, 278. His admiration of his niece, dressed for her bridal appearance at church, 298.

Selby, Mr James, fired with emulation of Sir Charles Grandison's accomplishments, he expresses a defire to travel, 37.

Selby, Miss Lucy, pleasantly charges Sir Charles Grandison with being a designer, 26. Further mention of her overcoming her passion for an undeferving lover, 85, 86. Offers to correspond with Lady G. 182. Proceeds with a letter begun by Miss Byron; but, through terror, left unfinished, 183, 184. Rallies her uncle Selby for his indelicacy, 199. Her reason why her cousin Byron's wedding-day will be a wicked day, 207. Her account of the preparation to entertain the tenants, and the poor, on that occafion, 218, 219. Writes in concert with Lady G. an account of the nuptials, 246 to 263. Describes the appearance at church, 296 to 300. Seemingly displeased with Lady G. for her pretending that the thought her description unequal to the fubject, 301.

Selby, Miss Nancy, her farcasm on Mr Greville, 51.

Affifts at Miss Byron's nuptials, 248.

Self-praise, in what cases lawful to repeat, 44. See Praise.

Sentimental men, 261.

d

r

-

1,

e

s,

d ged

y

of iis a-

er

lis

he

he

p-

r,

Sexes, whether equal or not by nature, 294.

Shakespeare, his great genius, unaided, as some suppose, by learning, 287.

Dd 3

Shirleys

Shirley, Mr, extolled by his tenants, 286.

Shirley, Mrs, Sir Charles Grandison addresses her with a reverence that does credit to his own heart, 26. Her lively turns in conversation 27. 28. Urges Sir Charles to speak unreservedly of the merits of Lady Clementina, 35. Picture to be drawn of Sir Charles and her converfing, 53, 54. Further instance of her pleasure in promoting that of young people, 56. Decision on the appeal brought to her by Sir Charles and Miss Byron, 114. A fine conversation between her and Sir Charles, 128. Visited, hand in hand, by Dr Curtis, a church of England clergyman, and Mr Milbourne, a diffenting minister, whom she had formerly brought to a good understanding, 129. Makes pious and instructive observations on the desponding letter of Sir Hargrave Pollexfen, 137. Fine instance of her tender love to Sir Charles, and of his pious reverence to her, 144, 194. Gives the day (left to her) for the celebration of the nuptials, 204, 205. Description of her withdrawing from company, supported by Miss Byron, 240. The meritorious occasion of her lameness, ib. Supports her grand-daughter's spirits on the weddingday, 250, 260. Bleffes her at her fetting out to church, 251. The spectators bless Sir Charles for his tender and respectful care of her, 254, 255. She bleffes him in the veftry, after the folemnization; and gives an instructive lesson to the young ladies present, 258, 259. Further lesson to the young ladies, advising them to made a good man their choice, 277. 279.

Single-women, fentiments for their benefit, 276, Singularity, 124.

Steele, Mr, a guest at Sir Charles Grandison's nuptials, 239, 248.

Story

Story, in works of imagination, is at this day hunted after by the English; sentiment by the French, 261.

Sumptuary laws, their revival to be wished for, 104. Superstition, 142.

Vice, 42.

W. Lord, arrives with his lady at Selby-house, to affist in the celebration of Sir Charles Grandifon's nuptials, 232. A different man to what he once was, lifted up from low keeping to a wife who, by her behaviour, good sense, and politeness, gives him consequence, 235, 236. His joy on Sir Charles's nuptials, 260.

W. Lady, her fine compliment to Sir Charles Grandison on his prospect of happiness with Miss Byron, 235. Her relation of an East-India officer's silencing a pedant, 285.

W. General, brother of Lord W. in the imperial fervice, defirous to make young Mr Grandison a foldier, 59.

Watson, Miss, 233. A bride-maid at Sir Charles Grandison's nuptials, 248.

Widows, the refuge of battered rakes, and young brothers, 87. Mr Everard Grandison like to be re-established by the kind widow of his winemerchant, ib. Lady G.'s reslections upon that subject, and upon the rich widows of tradesmen setting up for taste, and marrying reduced gentlemen, 88. See Everard Grandison.

Wife man, 35.

Wit, 94.

Women, want protection; therefore love men of courage, 190. Silly antipathies of women to beetles, fpiders, frogs, &c. exposed, ib. Daring in adventures, 190, 216. 217. Affect procrastination in certain cases, 295. They love hurry-skurries in Lady G.'s language 295, 296.

Youth,

Youth, 142, 255.

Zeal, religious zeal, says Jeronymo, is a strengthener, a confirmer of all the social sanctions, 8. Religious zeal, says Sir Charles Grandison, is too generally a fiery thing, 130.

SIMILIES

SIMILIES

AND

ALLUSIONS

IN THE

SEVENTH VOLUME.

BEAUTY, To flowers, 89.

Brides adorned for the nuptial ceremony, To heifers decked out for facrifice, 273.

Byron, Miss, To a snail shrinking into its shell, 102. In her prudery attributed to her by Lady G. To a pretty cow with a careless heel, 211. And by the same, To a see-sawed infant, ib. To Minerva, 237. Discretion, To late blowing flowers, 170.

G. Lord, To Mr Singleton, 232.

G. Lady, and her broken harpfichord, To a kitten, Grandison, Sir Charles, To the sun, 115. To a certain king of Egypt, by Mr Selby, 129, 130. His look, To a sun-beam, 238. His friends in the nuptial procession, To Satellites attending a primary planet, 255.

Greville, Mr, To a ferpent, 42. To the prophet Balaam, bleffing those whom he came to curse, 48, 49.

Heirs succeeding their fathers in their estates, and reversing their fathers' tastes, To the faces on the

the royal coin, each fucceeding prince looking the contrary way to that of his ancestors, 104.

Hope, To a crevice that lets in day, 145.

Husbands, by the lively Lady G. To the male blackbirds and sparrows, with a preference to other birds, 93.

L. Earl of, proud of his infant fon, To a peacock, 216.

Love, To Free Masonry, 12, 82, 196. To a bee, 84, 85. Love concealed, To a smothered fire, 221. To gun-powder, tinder, and gauze, 260.

Lovers, bashful, To two parallel lines, 13. To dunghill cocks, 13, 14. Trembling lovers, To people in an ague sit, 14. Negligent lovers, To lazy people gaping, 89. Gentle lovers, To shepherds and shepherdesses, ib.

Marriage, To passing the Rubicon, 212.

Orme, Miss, her reserve vanishing on Sir Charles's polite address, To the sun-shine emerging from a cloud, 100.

Pollexfen, Sir Hargrave, To Prince Prettiman in

the Rehearfal, 219.

Pride and love, both contending for master, To a coat torn in struggling, 96.

Selby, Mr, in a hurry, To an horse at liberty, 233.

To a person in a coach, pointing out to, yet hindering a prospect, 253. To a lady displeased at guessing her true age, ib.

Selby, Miss Lucy, by her uncle, in pleasantry, To a toad; Miss Byron says why, 217. Vice, To the Jerusalem artichoke, 86, 87.

Wit, vicious, To a person leading a friend through a bad road, when a good was before her, 95.

Women out of character, To extensive planets, 295. But containing themselves within their proper bounds, To doves, 296. Those boundaries, To the prohibited tree in paradise, 295.

END OF VOL. VII.

the royal coin, each succeeding prince looking the contrary way to that of his ancestors, 104.

Hope, To a crevice that lets in day, 145.

Husbands, by the lively Lady G. To the male blackbirds and sparrows, with a preference to other birds, 93.

L. Earl of, proud of his infant son, To a peacock, 216.

Love, To Free Masonry, 12, 82, 196. To a bee, 84, 85. Love concealed, To a smothered fire, 221. To gun-powder, tinder, and gauze, 260.

Lovers, bashful, To two parallel lines, 13. To dunghill cocks, 13, 14. Trembling lovers, To people in an ague sit, 14. Negligent lovers, To lazy people gaping, 89. Gentle lovers, To shepherds and shepherdesses, ib.

Marriage, To passing the Rubicon, 212.

Orme, Miss, her reserve vanishing on Sir Charles's polite address, To the sun-shine emerging from a cloud, 100.

Pollexfen, Sir Hargrave, To Prince Prettiman in

the Rehearfal, 219.

Pride and love, both contending for master, To a coat torn in struggling, 96.

Selby, Mr, in a hurry, To an horse at liberty, 233.

To a person in a coach, pointing out to, yet hindering a prospect, 253. To a lady displeased at guessing her true age, ib.

Selby, Miss Lucy, by her uncle, in pleasantry, To a toad; Miss Byron says why, 217.

Vice, To the Jerufalem artichoke, 86, 87.

Wit, vicious, To a person leading a friend through a bad road, when a good was before her, 95.

Women out of character, To extensive planets, 295. But containing themselves within their proper bounds, To doves, 296. Those boundaries, To the prohibited tree in paradise, 295.

